PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION.

This book is a revision of a Syllabus of Lectures used during the past three years with a class in the History of Education. In revising it for printing I have made such changes in arrangement and such additions and omissions as an experience of three years has seemed to indicate as desirable. It is hoped that in this new form the Syllabus and appended bibliographies will prove useful as a practical guide to teachers, librarians, and individual students.

The Syllabus is based on a combination of the lecture and library methods, with occasional class discussions and reports. Instead of confining students to a few text-books, the aim has been to give them breadth of view by familiarizing them with the literature of the subject, and to provide some training in methods of independent work.

An attempt has been made to study the history of education as a phase of the history of civilization. Accordingly a close connection has been maintained between the history of the civilization of a people and the ideas on and progress of education among them. Significant political events, changes in religious ideas, the attitude of the leaders toward the great problems, the progress of scientific discovery and invention, and the rise and progress of the scientific method and national spirit have been considered as a back-ground for the study of the history of educational theories and practice. An attempt has also been made to separate what was mere theory from what was actual practice, what was particular or local from what was general; to give some coherence to that confusing period between the Protestant Revolt and the nineteenth century; to set the work of the theorists and the reformers in a proper relation to one another and to the times in which they lived, and to point out how far they have influenced the present; and finally, to sketch the great organizing movements of the nineteenth century, taking Germany, France, and England as types. Only the slightest outline of the history of education in America is given; just enough to show the relation of the European development to our own, this subject being dealt with in another course.

Such a course of lectures must, for the present at least, be built up by the lecturer. To do this economically, both for his students and himself, a Syllabus of the lectures, with names, dates, and careful citations to authorities, is a necessity. The Syllabus is an abstract, telling much in some places and almost nothing in others, which the lecturer amplifies to a certain extent. The work of the student is to read and back up this outline. In any course which deals largely with concrete facts, such as the History of Education, the History of Economic Theory, School Hygiene, Economic Geology, etc., and which has not been fully organized and reduced to standard text-books, or the data of which are constantly changing, a Syllabus is of particular value. In such subjects not only can a half to two-thirds more work be done with a class by the use of an outline Syllabus, but it can also be done better than can a smaller amount under the method usually employed. With a Syllabus the student starts with the advantage of knowing just what is to be done and how to find the materials in a library with which to work. He spends his energies in working to a purpose. Proper names, dates, important facts, names of authors, the titles of books are all down in his working outline. No class time is wasted in copying such information from dictation, and no vexatious delays occur at the library from having misunderstood a title or misspelled a proper name. In the class note-taking the student is freed from the necessity of attempting to make an abstract of the lecture, and can concentrate his attention more fully upon what the lecturer says, such notes as are taken being in the nature of an amplification of the outline or of points to be looked up while reading. Much of the class note-taking done by students, in courses where they have no text-book or outline to follow, is not particularly profitable. The notes are usually an imperfect abstract of the lecture, points of minor importance are often exaggerated out of all proportion to their value, statements are frequently misunderstood, and the student not infrequently leaves the lecture room with a hazy conception of existing relations. With a Syllabus to follow, the class note-taking will be done much more intelligently and profitably.

A good Syllabus tends largely to remedy the defects of the lecture method. All that the Syllabus contains the student has to begin with. It becomes his text-book for the course, with the great advantage over a text-book in that it does not tell what the student ought to be finding out for himself. It is a means of making the work much more thorough and effective, though not necessarily easier to do. Finally, a logically arranged Syllabus, with reading notes, forms a basis for the best form of review.

A word should be said as to the many dates given and the length of the bibliographies. Numerous dates have been inserted throughout the Syllabus, not with the idea of having the students memorize them, but that, being constantly before their eyes, they may come to have a clear idea of the chronological sequence of events and the cross-sections, if I may use such an expression, of European history. In the bibliographies many more references have been given than any student can expect or be expected to read. The object of giving so many citations is threefold: First, to indicate a sufficient number that each student may be able to obtain and read two or three good authorities; second, to familiarize students with the available literature of each subject and provide teachers with a key to the same; and third, to give sufficient bibliographical information on each topic to enable students to work up the required semester reports. It naturally follows that a number of brief references have been introduced in the Syllabus, such as in Section XXIV, division V, 8, a (p. 159),
"What Braunschweig did. (Koldeway, I, xlv–lxxix, II, xl–lxx; Regener, 86–91; Ziegler, 93–99, 164–167)," for the purpose of referring teachers and advanced students to important literature and without the intention of going into details concerning these points in the lecture or of requiring students to read the works cited.

By adding new titles as the books appear the bibliographies may be made still more useful. To give some idea as to the nature and value of the literature cited the titles have been arranged in groups. In taking up each new section more detailed information as to the nature and value of each book or article should be given by the instructor.

It is a part of a college student's education to become familiar with books, to know the best that has been written on the subjects he studies, and to become somewhat familiar with the books themselves. The student in the old college who could browse about in the library had an immense advantage over the university student of to-day, who seldom gets nearer the stacks than the card catalogue. While the administration of a large library of necessity requires that the stacks be closed to the student body, it is none the less a misfortune to the individual student, and makes it all the more necessary that the instructor should provide the student with the bibliographies which he can no longer prepare, even in part, for himself. The great mass of literature at present available also makes it advisable that students and teachers be provided with a time-saving key.

With reference to the method followed in presenting the topics, as well as the subjects considered in or omitted from the Syllabus, I can only say that the present form has so far seemed to me to be the best one to follow. That I have emphasized points which others may consider of minor importance, and have omitted points which others would have inserted, I have no question. It is part of the fate of one who attempts to trace the history of intellectual progress that "he must submit," as Mr. Symonds says, "to bear the reproach of having done at once too little and too much."

PREFACE TO THE SECOND EDITION.

A second edition of this Syllabus having been called for, I have taken the opportunity to give the book a careful revision. Errors and omissions which occurred in the first edition have been corrected, so far as they have come to my notice. A new section on the Beginnings of Primary Education in France has been inserted (XXVIII), and a number of changes and additions have been made in almost every section. The important new literature of the past two years has been added to the bibliographies and to the page citations of the Syllabus. To the illustrations contained in the first edition, which are reproduced in this edition, I have added twenty-one new pictures of schools, four new maps, and eleven portraits of famous educators, making the total number of pictures, maps, charts, and portraits ninety. The size of the book has been increased by about sixty pages. The Index has been more than doubled in size.

Perhaps the most important change has been made in the lists of References attached to each section of the Syllabus. Besides the addition of new titles, a number of the lists have been further sub-divided and rearranged. After each title I have added the place and date of publication, and the edition used, if other than the first, in making the page citations in the body of the Syllabus. Finally, after each list of References, I have added a short discussion of the different books and articles cited, and given a purely personal estimate as to their relative value. In doing this I fully realize that I am on dangerous ground and that I am opening up to the reviewer an opportunity to use a caustic pen. The great gain to the student, librarian, and individual worker, and the saving in class time involved seem to me to outweigh the danger of personal criticism. Perhaps I ought to add that no claim to infallibility is made with reference to the judgments given, and that I fully realize that others, looking at the subject from slightly different points of view, might wish to rearrange the order of preference which I have indicated. All that is claimed for the Suggestions as to Reading is that they will prove to be a valuable time-saving key to the literature on each topic, though the author has hopes that his judgments, in the main, will be approved by other workers in the field. It ought always to be distinctly remembered that the opinion expressed of any work in any group of Suggestions refers, not to the book as a whole, but to the particular pages cited in that particular section of the Syllabus, and to these pages compared with the citations made to other works. Hence it may naturally happen that a book may be classed in one list of Suggestions as "very good," or even as "the best work in English on the subject," and in another list of Suggestions be classed as "unsatisfactory" or as "of minor value." It also may happen that a painstaking and scholarly work, excellent in itself, may be classed as "of but minor value" because the few pages which it contains on the particular subject are inferior to other more detailed references cited.

In this new and enlarged form it is hoped that this work will prove to be of much service to instructors, librarians, and individual students.

Williams, S. G. History of Ancient Education. [Bardeen, Syracuse, 1903.]
GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY.

†Williams, S. G. History of Medieval Education. [Bardeen, Syracuse, 1903.]
‡Williams, S. G. History of Modern Education. [Bardeen, Syracuse, 2d Ed., 1896.]

Of the general histories mentioned in the above list, Barnard, Munroe, Quick, Paulsen, Plath, Raumer, and Williams cover only the period since the Renaissance. Of the histories in English, Companay, Davidson, Kemp, Munroe, and Quick will be found most useful, considered as a whole. The primers by Browning and Hallman are good, but very brief. Munroe and Quick are the best on the modern reformers, and *Laurie on ancient education. Schmid is no longer of value, though often found in libraries. The three books by Williams are good on some topics and of little value on others. Companay, Davidson, and Kemp likewise contain chapters which are so brief and so lacking in detail as to be of little value. *Williams is not referred to in the Syllabus, *Laurie being preferred for the ancient period. Painter, Payne, and Seeley are very unsatisfactory, and are seldom referred to in the Syllabus. Shoup is of no value and is nowhere cited.

Of the German texts, Paulsen, Schmid, and Ziegler are standards. Schmid is an extensive work, and besides its value as a detailed historical work, contains good bibliographies for each section. Raumer, due to the English translations by Barnard, is still quite valuable. Stein and Kayser are also good. Of the short German histories, the ones by Dittes, Plath, Regener, and Schiller are among the best. These four and Ziegler have been cited throughout the Syllabus, and will afford students good practice in reading easy German.

II GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHIES OF THE HISTORY OF EDUCATION.

Arndt, Otto. Verzeichnis der pädagogischen Zeitschriften, Jahrbücher, und Lehrerkalender Deutschlands. [Berlin, 1893.]
Comenius Stiftung. Katalog der pädagogischen Centralbibliothek. List of 60,000 titles, mostly German. [Leipzig, 1892.]
Hall, G. Stanley. Bibliography of Education. [Heath, Boston, 1886.]
Hunziker, O. Katalog der Bibliothek des Pestalozzianums zu Zürich. [1894.]
Luckett, G. W. A. The History of Education as offered in the University of Nebraska; Appendix to Professional Training of Teachers. [New York, 1903.]
Monroe, Will S. Bibliography of Education. [Appleton, New York, 1897.]
Munroe, J. A. P. The Educational Ideal, pp. 233-247. [Heath, Boston, 1895.]
GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY.

Poole, W. F., and Fletcher, W. I. Annual Literary Index, yearly, 1892-1903. [New York.]

Poole, W. F., and Fletcher, W. I. Index to Periodical Literature; Abridgment, 1815–1899. [Boston, 1901.]

Van der Ley, P. H. Catalogue van de Pedagogische Bibliotheek van het Nederlandsch Onderwijsers-Gemeeenschap. [Amsterdam, 1891; Supplement, 1899.]

Werthe, August. Pedagogisches Vademecum, pp. 28–41, 225 titles. [Göttersloch, 1892.]

References to additional Bibliographies will be found under subject headings in the Syllabus.

The Columbia Catalogue is the most useful of all the list. Wyer & Lord, Poole & Fletcher, and Kehrback are good to keep up with the new literature. Kehrback is excellent, most of the articles being described and valued. Hall and Monroe (W. S.) should be in all libraries for reference, though the former is old and the latter is unsatisfactory and sometimes inaccurate. Monroe (P.) is a selected bibliography of the history of education rather than a syllabus. Poole's Index will be found useful in looking up the numerous short articles in current periodicals. Adams is a very valuable work, though dealing with general rather than educational history. Luckey is an outline Syllabus with selected bibliographies. The museum and library catalogues will be useful to those investigating special subjects. The special investigator will also find the extensive catalogues of the British Museum of much use.

III MISCELLANEOUS COLLECTIONS OF WRITINGS AND SOURCES.

Butler, N. M., editor. Great Educator Series. 11 V. [Scribner, N. Y., 1892–1901.]

Isaak, August, editor. Sammlung selten gewordener pädagogischer Schriften des 16 und 17 Jahrhunderts. 13 numbers. [Raschke, Zschopau, 1879–1886. (Sam'l. Päd. Sbhr.)

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY.

MONROE, PAUL. Source Book for the History of Education for the Greek and Roman Period. [Macmillan, New York, 1901.] (Other volumes promised.)

OXFORD HISTORICAL SOCIETY. Publications. 43 Vols., to 1902. [Clar. Pr., Oxford, 1884-1902.]

WARNER, CHAS. D. Library of the World's Best Literature. 30 Vols. [Peale & Hill, New York, 1898.]

The volumes belonging to the above collections will be referred to throughout the Syllabus wherever they apply, with the exception of Souquet, the extracts of which are too short to be of any particular value, and Warner. The latter may be found in almost all libraries, and often contains good translations, in whole or in part. Where accessible it is always worth consulting when properly edited editions are not at hand. The collections edited by A. Richter and by Israel contain valuable reprints of old works, and should be in every university library.

IV CYCLOPEDIAS OF EDUCATION.

BUISSON, F. Dictionnaire de pédagogie et d'instruction primaire. Two parts, each in 2 Vols. Pt. I contains the historical articles. [Paris, 1886-1887.]

ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA. 9th Ed. (Enc. Brit.)

REIN, GEO. W. Enzyklopädisches Handbuch der Pädagogik. 7 Vols. [Langensalza, 1895-1899.]

SANDER, F. Lexikon der Pädagogik. 1 Vol. [Breslau, 1889.]

The Britannica is usually worth consulting; its longer articles are good. Neither of the two English Cyclopedias of Education is of much value for historical purposes, though of the two Sonnenschein's is the better. Sander is of little value. Lindner has special reference to the Volksschule, with brief articles and good attached bibliographies.

Of the larger works, Rein is the best. The articles are less diffuse than in Schmid's larger work, and the bibliographies are good. Schmid's Geschichte der Erziehung is a better reference than his Encyklopädie. Buissou is good only for articles on France or Frenchmen.
V CHRONOLOGICAL TABLES: DICTIONARIES OF EDUCATIONAL HISTORY.

FISCHER, OTTO. Leben, Schriften, und Bedeutung der wichtigsten Pädagogen bis zum Tode Pestalozzi. [Gütersloh, 2d Ed., 1895.]

FOERSTER, EDUARD. Tabellen zur Geschichte der Pädagogik. [Bull, Strassburg, 3d Ed., 1899.]

PATZOLD, W. Tabellen zur Geschichte der Pädagogik. [Jena, 1891.]

Of the above Fischer is a valuable dictionary, and Foerster is a valuable chronological key. Patzold is of little value, and Funke is quite inferior to Fischer. These works are useful only as dictionary references.

VI HISTORICAL ATLASES.

COBECK, C. The Public School Historical Atlas. Sq. 8vo., 101 maps. [London, 1885.]

DROYES, PROFESSOR G. Allgemeiner Historischer Hand-Atlas. Large folio, German explanatory text. [Leipzig, 1886.]

LABBERTON. Historical Atlas. 4to, explanatory text.

Droysen and Poole are magnificent library reference atlases, with large well-executed maps. Putzer, Freeman, Labberton, and Colbeck are cheap atlases, and are named in the order of merit. The maps in Putzger are very well executed. The maps in Freeman, though somewhat lacking in detail, are still very satisfactory.

VII MAGAZINES, REPORTS, AND PROCEEDINGS.

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY.

School Review; a monthly journal of secondary education. [Chicago, 1893–date.]
11 Vols., completed with 1903. (Sch. Rev.)

All of these journals have published historical articles from time to time, and are referred to in the Syllabus. Barnard's Jr., Neue Bahn, and Pedagogium have been particularly rich in historical articles. Journals and reports should be examined from time to time for new literature.

VIII CITATIONS TO AUTHORITIES.

(Capes, 28–41)—All citations to authorities are inclosed in parentheses.

[1492]—All dates and explanatory statements, and the place and date of publication of all References are enclosed in brackets. Synonymous terms in foreign languages are in brackets and in italics.

All titles of books are in italics. Where an article forms part of a book or a magazine, and both are given, only the title of the book or magazine is printed in italics. In calling for books at a library desk call only for the title printed in italics.

In case the paging in the edition at hand does not correspond with the citation, as may happen with new or different old editions, consult the table of contents or the index of the book.

Where there are two or more books or articles by the same author in the same list of References, these are distinguished, both in the list and in the pages of the Syllabus, by the marks: *", †, ‡, §, , ††, etc.
II VALUE AND PLACE OF THE HISTORY OF EDUCATION.

I NATURE OF THE TEACHER'S WORK.
1 Tendency to limit ideas to a narrow circle, and professional activity to the elements of a few branches, leading to:
   a Narrow discussions of educational principles.
   b A one-sided view of education.
2 Corrective value of a thoughtful study of the history of education.
   This should lead to:
   a A willingness to reconsider and revise.
   b Broad, unprejudiced, and unselfish views on educational questions and in the shaping of an educational policy.
   c A more exalted ideal of one's work.
   d Higher personal efficiency.
      1) Efficiency increased by a knowledge of the history of one's art.
3 Need of a perspective in any field of labor.

II EDUCATIONAL PROGRESS A GRADUAL EVOLUTION.
1 Progress marked by increasing adaptation to the physical and social environment.
2 Evolution in education has taken place through helpful influences extended downward, not through ignorance reaching upward.
3 The hope of the race must ever depend on increasing culture for the greatest number.

III NATURE OF THE STUDY OF THE HISTORY OF EDUCATION.
1 The history of education a history of civilization.
   a The worth of a civilization determined by how thoroughly social and humanitarian influences have permeated the masses, not the classes.
      1) Contrast between ancient and modern nations.
      2) The submerged portion of ancient populations.
   b The history of education a history of changing national ideals.
      1) The slow stages of educational progress.
2 The history of education a study of the conscious or unconscious means employed for the perpetuation of national character and the promotion of public welfare, either social or religious.
VALUE AND PLACE OF THE HISTORY OF EDUCATION.

a. Advances and retrogressions.
b. Gradual secularization of education.
3. Value of the study from the standpoint of liberal culture.
a. Broader outlook and sympathy.
b. Willingness to labor and to wait.
c. One's ideals exalted through reverence for great teachers.
4. Methods of studying the history of education.
5. Place of the study in the teacher's training.
a. What it does not do for the teacher.

IV SMALL INTEREST IN OBSCURE BEGINNINGS.
1. Little of value in educational history until after men substituted reflection for instinct and science and art for an animistic conception of nature.
2. Study of among primitive people, or those who have contributed little to the stream of European civilization, of only minor value.
a. Individual or national life as opposed to tribal existence.
   1) An education ideal,—a philosophy of life necessary.
   2) Preservative vs. liberal education.
3. A distinct political or ethical conception necessary as a basis for a national system of education.
a. Consequent importance, in our study, of:
   1) The political organization.
      a) Classes in, and flexibility of society.
   2) Status of family and social life.
   3) The religious and moral conceptions of a nation.
   4) Power and influence of the clergy.
   5) State of scientific knowledge and investigation.
      a) Tolerance toward new truths.
   6) The national conception of education.
4. Early systems which are worthy of a brief study.

III ANCIENT EGYPTIAN EDUCATION.

I POLITICAL, SOCIAL, AND RELIGIOUS INFLUENCES. (Laurie, 11–38; Maspero, ch. iv; Renouf; Sayce, 58–72; Taylor, I, 15–42.)

   a Unifying elements in Egyptian life.
   b Bureaucratic government.

2 The religion a combination of many elements. (Budge, chs. vi, ix; Erman, ch. xii.)
   a Nature of among:
      1) The lower classes.
      2) The higher classes.
   b Power and influence of the priestly class.
      1) In developing the theology.
      2) In political and social affairs.
   c Morality preceptive and dogmatic,—not philosophical.
      1) Influence in developing a strong, manly type of character.

3 Social Conditions. (Maspero, 296–325.)
   a Partial caste system.
      1) The three orders or estates.
         a) Power and condition of each.
   b Ability of the clever to rise.
   c Status of woman. (Erman, ch. viii.)

II EDUCATION IN ANCIENT EGYPT. (Brassington, 17–25; Budge, ch. x; Erman, chs. xiv, xv; Laurie, 38–45; Rep. U. S. Com. Educ., 1894–1895, II, pp. 1798–1799.)

1 Based on the religion, morality, law and social customs of the land.
   a Emphasis placed on:
      1) Practical intelligence.
      2) Development of personality.

2 Nature of Egyptian education.
   a Elementary schools.
      1) Elements of reading, writing and arithmetic.
         a) To whom open. Where found. How far general.
   b Advanced instruction.
1) Reading and writing the hieratic and hieroglyphic characters, and mathematics. (Budge, ch. ii; Cajori, 9-15.)
   a) Where such schools were found.
2) These opened the way to the professions.
   a) How a lower class boy might rise.

3 The professions in Egypt. Higher learning. (Budge, ch. v; Rawlinson, I, ch. ix; Sayce, 72-89; Smith, ch. ix, pt. v.)
   a) The scribe; his work and learning.
   b) The architect; his training.
   c) The physician; nature of his attainments.
   d) Singers; dancers; musicians; jugglers.

4 Training for military life.
5 Education of the priestly class.
   a) Exoteric and esoteric knowledge.
   b) The priestly colleges.

6 Method; discipline.

7 No conscious social effort involved. (Laurie, 45-48.)
   a) Technical vs. liberal purpose.

3 Suggestions as to Reading.
   The general student, beginning the study, will find Laurie best adapted to his needs. This work has particular reference to the education of the Ancient Egyptians, and covers the section of the Syllabus rather fully. Budge, Erman, and Sayce are very good on the social life of the Egyptians. Taylor is valuable, but deals more with the religion, art, and literature of the Egyptians than with their education. See the pages of the Syllabus for more detailed suggestions as to reading.
IV EDUCATION IN ANCIENT CHALDEA, ASSYRIA, AND BABYLONIA.

(Laurie, 53-63; Schmid, I, 137-153; Smith, ch. xvii.)

I MODIFYING CONDITIONS. (Budge, chs. ix, x; †Maspero, ch. ix; Taylor, I, 42-45.)
1 Relation of Chaldea, Assyria, and Babylonia to one another.
2 Mixed character of the religion. (*Sayee, ch. viii; †Sayee, 145-157.)
   a Gradual elevation by the priesthood of the Lord of Hosts, the God of Battle, above the other gods.
   b Popular religion a crude polytheism.
      1) Lack of a strong ethical element as a basis for education.
3 Family life and status of the wife. (*Sayee, chs. ii, iv.)
   a Polygamy and concubinage.
   b Lack of a strong moral basis for education.
4 Absence of the despotic caste system.
   a Political status of the masses.
   b Slavery practically a caste. (*Sayee, ch. vi.)
5 Country constantly disturbed by wars.
   a Effect of this.
   b Contrast with Egypt.

II NATURE OF UPPER-CLASS EDUCATION. (Budge, ch. viii; *Sayee, chs. iii, vii; †Sayee, 157-173.)
1 Extensive education for the few.
   a Town libraries. [Brick tablets.]
      1) Assur-bani-pal’s work. (Brassington, 7-16; *Maspero, ch. xvi.)
   b State observatories and astronomers-royal.
      1) Astrological tables.
      2) Sargon’s library.
   c Practical mathematics. (Cajori, 5-9.)
   d Technical and military training.
   e Medicine largely magic formulæ.
2 For whom intended.
3 Probably royal as well as priestly and scribe schools.
   a Little known as to schools and teachers.
   b Probable nature of instruction.
4 Status of elementary education.

Brassington, W. S. History of the Art of Bookbinding. [Stock, London, 1894.]

3 Suggestions as to Reading.
The general student, beginning the study, will probably find Laurie and ch. iii in "Sayce the most useful. Budge also is very good. Taylor contains a valuable and readable article, though bearing only indirectly on education among these early people. The two works by Maspero and the one by †Sayce are valuable, but too detailed and too special to be of particular value to the general student. See the pages of the Syllabus for more detailed suggestions as to reading.
V. INDIA AND THE ANCIENT HINDUS.
(Compayré, 2–8; Dutt; Kemp, ch. ii; Letourneau, 387–403; May, I, 3–13; Schmid, I, 87–116; Stein, I, 171–174.)

I RELIGION AND CASTE. (†Dutt, chs. i–iii; Laurie, 157–166; LeBon, 283–333.)
1 Brahmical caste system developed [1200–1000 B. C.].
2 The castes in the State. (†Dutt, I, 228–246.)
   a Priests [Including scholars and legislators.]
   b Military caste [Including executives].
   c Merchants [All who employed labor].
   d Laborers.
   e A still lower class. Social outcasts. Pariah.
3 Religious conceptions. (Taylor, I, ch. iii.)
   a A combination of shamanism, ancestor worship, and pantheism.
      1) Transmigration; sacrifice; ritualism.
      2) Moral aim absorption,—extinction; endless felicity, not Christian sacrifice.
   b Buddhism [500–242 B. C.] a reform movement. (†Dutt, chs.
      iv–v; Taylor, I, ch. iv.)
      1) Its equally despairing outlook.
4 Low position of woman. (†Dutt, I, 247–262; II, 89–107.)
   a Effect on education.

II THE HINDU EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM. (†Dutt, chs. i–iii; Laurie, 166–177.)
1 The priestly caste. What this included.
   a Extent and aim of higher education. (†Dutt, I, 263–271; II, 125–134.)
   b The priestly colleges.
      1) What was taught in these.
   c Private schools. Adventure schools.
2 The military and merchant castes.
   a Extent to which these might partake of education.
3 The laboring class.
   a Their place in the nation.
4 The village commune in education.
5 The position of woman.
   a Education of.
   b Exceptions.
6 Method of teaching.

   TAYLOR, HENRY OSBORN. Ancient Ideals, I. [New York, 1898.]

3 Suggestions as to Reading.
   The general student will probably find Laurie the most useful and valuable of the references. †Dutt is also very good, being a popular abstract of the larger standard work. Letourneau is good on all early people, and will be useful if the student reads or desires to practice reading French. Taylor deals largely with the religious conceptions. Le Bon has good chapters on the arts, sciences, and civilization of the people, and is beautifully illustrated. Chamberlain is a recent doctor’s dissertation which describes conditions and progress during the past one hundred years only. See the pages of the Syllabus for more detailed suggestions as to reading.
VI CHINESE EDUCATION.

(Blot, see contents; Compeyré, 11–13; Eudo; Hallman, Lect. i; Kemp, ch. i; Letourneau, ch. x; May, I, 15–24; Payne, 3–8; Schmid, I, 59–87.)

I INFLUENCES WHICH HAVE PREVENTED PROGRESS. (†Douglas; Laurie, 104–120; Taylor, I, 45–57; Williams, I, chs. x, xi.)

1 Geographical isolation.
2 National self-conceit.
3 Nature of spoken language.
4 A literary language which crystallized in its early stages.
5 Personality of the individual over-shadowed by:
   a The family and the State.
   b The spirits of the dead.
6 Superstitious reverence for the past.
   a Antiquity a guarantee for truth.
   b Over-shadowing influence of Confucius [b. 551 B. C.]; Mencius [d. 317 B. C.]; and the Chinese Classics. (Eudo; Giles, chs. ii, iii; *Legge, lects. i, ii; †Legge, I, 1–21, 91–113; Williams, I, ch. xi.)

7 "The Doctrine of the Mean," or "Just Medium." (†Legge, I, 35–55.)
8 Absence of philosophical speculation or physical science.
9 A love of formalism and ritual.

II RELIGIOUS AND MORAL IDEAS. (Laurie, 104–120.)

1 Conception of a Supreme Being and of a future life.
2 Knowledge with reference to virtue and morality.
3 Morality, social order, and propriety of conduct the fundamentals.
4 Sanctity of the family relation. (*Douglas, ch. x.)
   a Relation of husband and wife.
   b Relation of father and children.
5 Prudential virtue. Rules vs. feelings.

III THE EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM. (Barnes; *Douglas, ch. ix; Laurie, 120–126; Letourneau, ch. x; Williams, I, ch. ix.)

1 General education common for 4,000 years.
   a The present system began in the second century B. C., and was fully organized by 700 A. D.
2 Effect of Chinese ideas on education.
3 Have they a system of public education?
4 Admission to civil and honorary service.

IV THE EXAMINATION SYSTEM.  (Barnes; Doolittle, I, chs. xv–xvii;
*Douglas, ch. ix; Holecombe, ch. xi; Laurie, 126–134; *Martin, 39–56, 75–82; †Martin, 22–28; Smith, ch. x; Williams, I, ch. ix.)

1 The preparation. Books studied.
2 The preliminary examinations.
   a Nature and frequency of.
   b Privileges to those who pass.
3 The departmental examinations.
   a Nature and frequency of.
   b Privileges to those who pass.
4 The provincial examinations.
   a Nature and frequency of.
   b Privileges to those who pass.
5 The Peking examination.
6 Numbers taking the examinations.
7 Powers tested by the examinations.
8 Rewards of success.
9 The callings open to an educated Chinaman.

V CHINESE SCHOOLS.  (Doolittle, I, ch. xv; Dresslar; Holecombe, ch. xi;
Laurie, 134–145; Lee; *Martin, 57–84; †Martin; Smith, chs. ix–x; Williams, I, ch. ix.)

1 The school-master and the school.
   a Hours; fees; buildings; etc.
   b Age and ceremony of admission.
   c Manner of instruction.
2 Course of study.
   a Rigidly; rote work.
   b The three grades of instruction.
      1) The first book or Primer.
      2) The second book.
3 Method of instruction.  (Dresslar; Smith, ch. x.)
   a Earlier stages; reading and writing.
   b Higher stages.
4 Discipline.
5 Education of women.
VI RESULTS OF THE SYSTEM. (Laurie, 145-151.)
1 Political and social results.
2 Characteristic qualities of mind of the Chinese.
3 Lack of an ideal human aim.
4 The system from our point of view.

5 Suggestions as to Reading.
All of the Important Secondary Authorities are good, Dresslar, Laurie, Martin, Smith, and Williams being especially valuable. There is little to choose between these works. †Legge, in the introduction to his great work, gives a good idea as to the ancient influences which are still operative in China. Of the second group, Hailman and Kemp contain good short chapters. Taylor is the best of the General Works. See the pages of the Syllabus for more detailed suggestions.
VII PERSIAN EDUCATION.

(Compayré, 14–15; Kemp, ch. liii; Laurie, 178–195; Letourneau, 403–414; Schmid, I, 115–137.)

(Duff; Leipsiger, 187–197; Marcus, pt. 1; Simon, pt. 1; Strassburger, 1–24; Taylor, II, chs. xvii, xviii, ix.)

1 Preceding the time of Moses.
   a Character of the people.

2 From the Exodus [1493 B.C.] to the death of Samuel [1043].
   (Deuteronomy, v, vi; †Imber, 1801–5; Kent, 89–98; Laurie, 65–80.)
   a The educational and political reforms of Moses.
      1) His exalted conception of God.
   b Education entrusted to the priests and Levites.
      1) What they taught.
      2) Priests gradually neglected their duty.
   c Samuel founded the school of the Prophets.
      1) Importance of their work.
   d Nature of the education of the masses up to the time of Samuel.

3 From the death of Samuel [1043] to the return from Babylon [538].
   (†Imber, 1804–5; Kent, 196–206; Laurie, 80–83; Proverbs, I.) a The reforms of Samuel short-lived. From the death of Solomon [976] to the captivity [721; 588] a period of civil dissensions and increasing ignorance.
   b The Jews in the schools of their captors.

4 From the return from Captivity [538] to the birth of Christ. (Laurie, a Priests and Scribes became the teachers of the people.
      1) The priests neglected their priestly functions, for which they were called to account (Malachi, II, 1–12).
      2) The synagogues [c. 450] centers of instruction. Ezra's great open-air Bible class (Laurie, 86–88; Nehemiah, vii, 1–8.)
   3) Sabbath schools among the Jews at this period. (Ellis.)
   b Ezra [c. 450] called "The Great Synod" together. Work of this assembly in establishing schools. (†Imber, 1806–8, 1818–20.)
      1) Advances during this period.
c Learning and law now centered in the Scribes, or "Rabbins."
(Laurie, 84–91.)

1) Conception of education as a means of national regeneration and preservation.
b First people to insist on the education of all.
c Lasting effect of the religious and national training.

II THE TALMUD: ITS CHARACTER, DIVISIONS, AND DATE.
(†Imber, 1808–10.)
1 The Mishnah.
a Covers two centuries before and after Christ.
b Written by the Rabbins after 70 B. C.
   1) First edition, 190 A. D.
   2) First critical edition, 270 A. D.
2 The Gemara.
a Covers about three centuries from the close of the Mishnah.
b Written about 500 A. D.

III EDUCATIONAL MAXIMS FROM THE TALMUD.
1 He who studies and teaches others possesses treasures and riches.
2 He who has learned and does not impart his knowledge unto others disregards the Word of God.
3 It is not permitted to live in a place where there is neither master nor school.
4 Jerusalem was destroyed because her instructors were not respected.
5 If both the father and the teacher are threatened with any material loss the latter should be protected first.
6 As soon as the child begins to speak the father should teach him to say in Hebrew, "The law which Moses commanded us is the heritage of the congregation of Jacob," and, "Hear, O Israel, the Eternal our God is one God."
7 The teacher should strive to make the lesson agreeable to the pupils by clear reasons, as well as by frequent repetitions, until they thoroughly understand the matter and are able to recite it with great fluency.
8 No man can acquire a proper knowledge of the Law unless he endeavors to fix the same in his memory by certain marks and signs.
9 Let the honor of the pupil be as dear to thee as thine own.
10 He who gives instruction to an unworthy pupil will suffer for the consequences thereof.
HEBREW EDUCATION.

11 The study of the Law is very important because it leads to good actions. He whose good actions exceed his wisdom, his wisdom shall endure.
12 Just as a man is bound to have his son instructed in the Law, so also should he have his son taught some handicraft or profession. Whosoever does not teach his son a handicraft teaches him to be a thief.
13 One learns much from his teachers, more from his school-fellows, but most of all from his pupils.
14 The instruction of children should not be interrupted, even for the purpose of building a Holy Temple.
15 Only those pupils should be punished in whom the master sees that there are good capacities for learning, and who are inattentive; but if they are dull and cannot learn they should not be punished. Punish with one hand and caress with two.

IV THE CIVIL LAWS OF THE TALMUD. (Fenton; Spiers, 57-106.)
1 Divisions and nature of the Laws.
  a Laws relating to damage suffered by a person or his cattle and other animals, caused by a pit, well, or fire.
  b Laws relating to claims for theft.
  c Laws relating to compensation for bodily injuries.
  d Laws relating to robbery.
2 What the Laws reveal as to the life and occupations of the people.

V THE SCHOOL SYSTEM OF THE TALMUD. (Laurie, 92-100; Leipziger, 198-221; Letourneau, 359-372; Lewit; Kemp, ch. v; Marcus, pt. 2; Simon, pt. 2; Strassburger, 24-91.)
1 The community and its educational duties. (†Imber, 1811-14.)
2 Points of importance in the later Hebrew system of education.
   (†Imber, 1812-14; Spiers, 1-18. Maxims, above.)
   a Qualities requisite to becoming a teacher.
   b High estimation of the office of instructor. Reverence for.
      (Spiers, 16-18, 37-39. Maxims, above.)
   c Education a national interest.
   d Duties of parents. (Edersheim, ch. vii; †Imber, 1813-14. Maxims, above.)

4 Suggestions as to Reading.

Of the Sources, Imber is interesting and valuable, and should be consulted by students. Of the first group of secondary authorities, Laurie, Leiziger, and Spiers will be of greatest value to the beginning student. Imber also contains much that is valuable. Marcus and Straussburger are old standards, but long and including much detail. Lewit is a more recent and a valuable work. Leiziger is a free translation of a portion of Marcus. Spiers is an especially valuable work. Edersheim is an old popular work. Of the second group of Secondary Authorities, Duff is particularly valuable for the religion and ethics of the Hebrew people as a background to their education, though their educational system is not specifically described. The few pages in Ellis are quite interesting. Kent and Fenton describe the life of the people. Taylor is good on the ideals of the Hebrew people. Plath is good for practice in reading easy German. The chapters in Companyré and Kemp are not very satisfactory.
IX GREEK EDUCATION.

(Browning, 1–17; Compayré, 17–42; Felton, I, lect. viii; Freeman, map iv; Graeber; Hallman, 18–30; Kemp, ch. vi; May, I, 43–138; Quinn; Regener, 2–18; Schiller, 5–15; Schmid, I, 178–257.)

A MODIFYING INFLUENCES AND GENERAL CHARACTERISTICS.

I INFLUENCE OF THEIR RELIGION. (*Davidson, 3–11; De Coulanges, 49–67; Dickinson, 1–18, 126–138; Gardner and Jevons, 68–87; Laurie, 196–210, 213–226; Smith, 47–55; Taylor, I, ch. viii.)

1 Religion idealized humanity.
   a Absence of awe and fear.

AN ATHENIAN SCHOOL.
(From a cup discovered at Caere, signed by the painter Duris, and now in the Museum of Berlin. A. Michaelis, Archaeolog Zeitung, 1873, pl. 1.)

A LESSON IN MUSIC AND GRAMMAR.

[Explanations:—At the right is the paidagogos; he is seated, and turns his head to look at his pupil, who is standing before his master. The latter holds a triptych and a stylus; he is perhaps correcting a task. At the left a pupil is taking a music lesson. On the wall are hung a roll, a diptych, a lyre, and an unknown cross-shaped object.]

A LESSON IN POETRY AND MUSIC.

[Explanations:—At the right sits, cross-legged, the paidagogos, who has just brought in his pupil. The boy stands before the teacher of poetry and recites his lesson. The master, in a chair, holds in his hand a roll which he is unfolding, upon which we see Greek letters.
Above these three figures we see on the wall a cup, a lyre, and a leather case of flutes. To the bag is attached the small box containing mouthpieces of different kinds for the flutes.
Farther on a pupil is receiving a lesson in music. The master and pupil are both seated on seats without backs. The master, with head erect, looks at the pupil who, bent over his lyre, seems absorbed in his playing. Above are hanging a basket, a lyre, and a cup. On the wall is an inscription in Greek.]
III NATURE OF ATHENIAN EDUCATION. (*Davidson, 60–92; Guhl and Koner; Laurie, 248–288; Quinn, 108–111, 186–200, 271–276; Whittaker.)

6 Suggestions as to Reading.

Of the Sources, Jowett's translations and the two works by Bryan, which are based on Jowett, are excellent. Monroe is a good collection of extracts, bearing largely on the theory of ancient education. Plutarch is worth reading carefully. Lowrey is a translation of Lucian's dialogue of Anacharsis and Solon, with many comments. The collection of extracts edited by Fling is quite serviceable. Burnet is a recent work in the Cambridge Training College series.

Of the Special Secondary Authorities, the first two by Davidson, and those by Hobhouse, Laurie, †Mahaffy, and Wilkins are of the first importance. †Davidson and Laurie being particularly valuable. Hobhouse is a history of practice, and contains many citations to authorities. Lane is a popular and a very readable essay, though of less value than the works cited above. Whittaker is a short and interesting sketch. Grasberger is a monumental work, and almost all later writers have been indebted to it. It contains so many extracts from sources that it is almost a book of sources in itself. Smith's Dictionary is a mine of information, and its citations to authorities are of much value. Schmid contains a very detailed account. Using is a valuable, condensed treatise. Stadelmann is a popular sketch, based on secondary authorities, and written in easy German. Daremberg and Saglio, and Girard contain many excellent pictures, as well as valuable citations and descriptive text.

Of the books and articles in group 3 referring to particular periods or phases, the articles in Abbott, Bosanquet, Netteshelt, Taylor, and the two books by Zeller all bear on the later work of the theorists. Zeller's works are excellent, though too long for ordinary use. Fitch has a good chapter on Socrates as a teacher. Tylow explains arithmetical method in detail. Capes deals with a special and limited phase of the later higher education. Kingsley, † Mahaffy, and Hatch deal with the influence of Greek ideas on the later thought at Alexandria, Rome, and in the Christian world, Hatch being particularly valuable. Godley is a valuable and very readable book, and is the best work for the period of the Sophists. Sandys, a wonderful example of painstaking scholarship, is valuable for the Alexandrian period.

Of the references in group 4 containing short general articles, Becker and Richter refer to the games and the gymnasium more particularly than the others. Becker, Felton, Göll, Guhl, and Kone, and Müller are old standards. Felton, and Guhl and Kone are particularly good. Müller describes Spartan education in detail. Letourneau contains a good sketch and offers good practice in reading French. The two chapters in Gulick are good, but short. The histories of education cited contain only short and very general chapters, and are usually unsatisfactory. The German histories will afford good language practice.

Of the General Works, W. W. R. Ball and Cajori relate to the state of mathematical knowledge in Greece and later at Alexandria. Routledge states the same for both mathematics and science. Butcher, Dickinson and Mahaffy contain chapters on the family and social life of Greece, while Fowler, Lloyd, and May bear on the political aspect of Greek life. Draper gives a very readable account of the changes in Greek philosophy and science. Schreiber is a volume of pictures, illustrative of Greek life.

The beginning student will probably find †Davidson, †Davidson, Hobhouse, Lane, Laurie, †Mahaffy, or Wilkins the most useful to begin with, and then supplement the book read with a second from the above list or with other references which refer more directly to particular phases. Sandys is very good for the Alexandrian period, and Godley for the Sophists and Socrates. Monroe is best for the sources. The pages of the Syllabus should be consulted for more detailed suggestions as to reading.
X ROMAN EDUCATION.

(Compayré, 43–60; Grasberger; Hailman, 42–51; Kemp, ch. vii; Klemm, ch. ix, pt. 1; Plath, § 3; Regener, 19–22; Schiller, 15–29; Schmid, I, 258–293; Smith.)

6 Roman Histories.

Students in need of purely historical information will find the following general histories quite serviceable:
Bury, J. B. Mentioned above. 2 Vols.
Duby, V. Mentioned above. 8 Vols.
7 Suggestions as to Reading.

Of the Sources, certain chapters in Quintilian represent the best in Roman educational theory during the early days of the Empire, and are worth consulting. Plutarch represents an earlier attitude. Monroe is the best collection of sources, though the collection by Fling is quite useful.

Of the Special Secondary Authorities in group 2, Clarke is a particularly valuable book. The topics treated are well selected and the treatment is well balanced. Laurie is an almost equally important reference. The three books by Davidson are good, but the treatment is limited to special phases. Hobhouse is a good history of practice and contains many citations to authorities. Gruberger is an old standard, and a monumental work. Stadelmann is a good popular sketch. Darmenberg & Saglio, and Smith contain many excellent pictures and many citations to authorities, as well as good descriptive text.

Of the Secondary Authorities in group 3, having reference to particular periods or phases, Hatch is particularly valuable. The two works by Mahaffy are also quite valuable, though written in a more popular style. The three treat of the introduction of Greek thought into the Roman world, and the reaction of the Roman world to the new ideas. Taylor traces the change in national ideals with the change in character of the national life, and is a valuable reference. Nettleship has a good essay on the study of Latin grammar at Rome in the first century A.D.

Of the Secondary Authorities in group 4, containing only short general chapters, Becker, and Gull & Komer are old standards and contain good articles. Marquand and Gill are old standard German authorities. Letourneau contains a good chapter, and will afford good practice in reading French. Dittes, Plath, Regener, and Schiller contain short and very general articles, in the main unsatisfactory, but offering good material for practice in reading German. Church, Thomas and Pellisson are well written and contain good chapters, though of a very general nature. The chapters in Browning and Compañeré are short and unsatisfactory.

Of the General Works in group 5, Brassington, Clark, Johnston, and Lanciani contain chapters or sections referring to books and libraries at Rome. Tighe is valuable only for the political organization. Adams, Bury, Dill, Hodgkin, and Kingsley refer to the period of decline, and all are excellent. Dill is a standard work on this period. Kingsley presents the spirit of the period rather than the mere facts. Draper describes the period of decline in a forceful manner. Hallam is an old standard, though now in part superseded by later writers. Fling pictures the state of morals in ancient heathen society. Venerable contains a good short essay on Quintilian. Fowler shows the inadequacy of the Roman educational system to meet the changed conditions at Rome.

The beginning student will probably find Clarke and Laurie the most useful references. A good plan would be first to read Clarke entire, which will not take long, and then supplement with selections from Laurie, Monroe's Source Book, or Quintilian. For the Period of Decadence, the pages indicated in almost any one of the references cited on page 46 will give what is needed, though perhaps Adams, Bury, Dill, Draper, or Laurie will be most serviceable. The pages of the Syllabus should be consulted for more detailed suggestions as to reading.
XI EARLY CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

6 Suggestions as to Reading.

Of the Sources, the collections by Fling, Jones, Mitchell, and Munro & Brumhall are well selected and valuable. St. Jerome and Clement give a good idea of the poverty of early Christian education. Parts of St. Augustine’s Confessions are very interesting.

Of the Secondary Authorities in group 2, the most valuable are probably Dill, Hallam, Lecky, Mullinger, and Schaff. Hallam has long been a standard, and, though his conclusions have been vigorously assailed, his treatment in the main is still good. Mullinger is an excellent book. Dill gives a good description of later Roman life, the chapter on education and culture in the fifth century being very good. Schaff is a monumental work, and should be consulted whenever details and thorough treatment are desired. Schmid is good for students who read German. The article by Magevney gives the impression that education was far more general than other authorities would lead us to believe. Smith & Cheetham contains good short articles.

Of the Secondary Authorities in group 3, Adams is one of the best. The treatment of each topic is concise and good. Buru is a standard history. It is scholarly, fair, and interesting. Draper is a strong and vigorous work, but underestimates the value of the work of the Early Church. Kingsley, in his preface, gives a good statement of the forces in conflict at Alexandria and throughout the Roman world. Renan is a careful treatment of the influence of Roman ideas on the organization of the Church, and of Christianity as a reaction against the Roman world. Taylor is very valuable as a description of paganism and Christianity in conflict, and Taylor is likewise valuable on the Christian rejection of pagan learning.

Of the Secondary Authorities under group 4, Fisher, Hatch, John, and Moeller are perhaps the most valuable. Fisher is a standard historian of the Church. His histories are concise, written in an attractive style, and free from partisanship. John (Kaye) is a very good and concise description of the growth and organization of the early Church. Kurtz and Moeller are translations of standard German works. Allard is a valuable condensation of the author’s five-volume history of the persecutions. Gibbon is a model of exhaustive scholarship, though usually criticised by Church historians for his bias against early Christianity. Plummer describes the growth and spread of Christianity, and criticises the five reasons for this as advanced by Gibbon. A Hardy is very good on the persecutions. Hardy’s introduction in English (correspondence in Latin) is also good. Hatch is a standard work and worth consulting on the mingling of old world thought and the new ideals. Emerson is very good for purely historical data.

Of the Secondary Authorities under group 5, regarding the early history of Monasticism, Montalambert is the most exhaustive work. It is an eloquent history, strongly Catholic in sympathy, but characterized by fairness and good judgment. Smith and Wishart are concise histories, and for that reason much more serviceable to the general reader. Wishart is a popular account, based on secondary authorities, but is one of the best for general use. The chapter in Trench is very good. Cutts is an old, standard, popular account of Middle Age scenes. Milman is an old work, but still valuable for its good descriptions and because of its catholic breadth of view. The pages in Taylor contain a good and well written account. Thacher & Schwill is useful for purely historical information.

The beginning student will probably be able to obtain the best general view of the period by reading the citations in Adams, Fisher, Taylor, Kemp or Williams, and Wishart. St. Jerome should be read as one of the sources. The pages of the Syllabus should be consulted for more detailed suggestions as to reading.

I FROM OFFENSIVE TO DEFENSIVE. (Church, 1-14; Duruy, 1-16; Emerton, chs. i-ii; Thomas, ch. xiii.)

1 The Belgae, Aquitani, and Celts [Gauls] of Caesar's time.
   a Life and manners of the early Germans. (Henderson, ch. i; Howland; Klemm, ch. ix, pt. 2; Jones, 19-37; Tacitus.)
   b Gradual consolidation of these tribes.
   c The Rhine and the Danube become the boundaries of the Empire.
   d The change from offensive to defensive. The pressure from behind.

1) The year 166 A. D. a turning-point in the fortunes of the Empire.

2 Successive invasions from the North and East.
   a The Goths invaded the Eastern Empire [106-378]; the Visigoths under Alaric invaded Italy and Spain [305-414]; and the Ostrogoths moved into Italy [490-493]. Church chs. i, ii; Emerton, ch. iii; *Hodgkin, iii-v; †Hodgkin.
   b The Vandals and Sueves left the mouth of the Danube [378], moved West and South, crossed into Spain [409] and into Africa [429].
   c The Burgundians reached the Rhine frontier [c. 290], and settled near the present city of Worms [413]. (Church, chs. i, ii; Emerton, 39-40.)
   d The Huns appeared on the Volga [375], and under the leadership of Attila ravaged Gaul and Italy [449-454], and then returned to the Danube. (Church, ch. i; Emerton, ch. vii; *Hodgkin, 80-86, lect. vi.)
   e The Angles, Saxons, and Jutes settled in Kent [443-449], in Sussex [477], and in Wessex [485]. (Abdy, lects. viii, xi; Church, chs. iv, ix.)
   f The Northmen began their attacks on the English coast [787], overran Northumbria, and plundered and burned the churches and monasteries [866].
   g Peace of Wedmore [878]. (See map, p. 68.)
   h The Franks, a great nation living along the lower Rhine [475], extended their power to the West and South [480-530]. Adams, ch. vii; Church, ch. ii; Emerton, chs. vii, x.)
   i The Saracen migrations, or conquests [632-732]. (Draper, I, 327-348; Emerton, 122-129; Stillé, ch. iv; Trench, lect. iv.)

II THE DANGER TO CIVILIZATION. (Adams, 104-106.)

1 Why all civilization was not destroyed.
   a Relative danger from the different invading tribes.

2 Necessity of building up a new foundation for a future civilization.
   a The consolidating force.

3 Why the lamps of learning almost went out.
III CHARACTER OF THE INVAVERS; WHAT THEY BROUGHT.
(Adams, ch. v; Guizot, II, lect. vii; *Hodgkin, 55–72; Montalambert, I, 437–449; Stillé, chs. i–ii; Tacitus.)

1 Their form of government.
   a Where sovereignty rested.
   b Nobility: of whom composed. The king.
   c Classes in the tribe, or nation.
   d Military clientship.

2 Their law system. (Emerton, ch. viii; Henderson, 176–189; Ozanam, 123–173.)
   a German law: Salic law: Ripuarian law.
      1) The life of the people as shown in these laws.
   b How developed and administered.

3 Their personal qualities.

4 Their mode of life.
   a Effect of on the decaying civilization of the Roman Empire.

IV THE IMPRESS OF ROME UPON THEM. (Abdy, 1–15; Adams, 20–38; Bryce, 15–31; Church, 53–61; Ozanam, 325–407.)

1 The past work of Rome in unifying the life of the provinces. Effect in:
   a Perpetuating Roman institutions.
   b Paving the way for the Church.

2 The influence of Roman law and order. Guizot, II, lect. xi; Taylor, 56–66.)
   a Theodosian and Justinian codes.
   b Military organization.
   c The idea of a central power.
   d The idea of corporate municipal life.

3 The influence of Romano-Hellenic learning and culture.

4 The superior Roman civilization everywhere met with.
   a The Latin language. (Church, 55–61.)

V THE IMPRESS OF CHRISTIANITY UPON THEM. (Allen, ch. x; Church, 45–53; Dittes, 82–86; Fisher, 96–97, 114–152, 160–161; Gibbon, III, ch. xxxvii, 687–695; Kingsley, lects. viii–ix; Maitland; May, I, 239–251; Stillé, 53–69.)

1 Barbarians encounter an organization stronger than force and greater than kings, which they must:— a Accept and make terms with, or b Absolutely destroy.
2 Character of the services rendered by the bishops, priests, and monks. (Allen, 204–226; Draper, I, 437–439; Gibbon, III, ch. xxxvii, 687–692, 709–711; Kingsley, lect. ix; Lecky, II, 243–248; Magevney, 1–24; Montalambert, I, 437–455, 497–541, 660–679; Trench, lects. iii, v.)

a Work of Ulphilas [c. 313–383] and others among the Goths of southern Russia. (Hodgkin, 77–78; Moeller, II, 31–33.)

b Others strove to convert kings and tribes. Barbarian Europe slowly Christianized. (Fisher, 96–97, 144–152; Milman, I, bk. 3, ch. ii, II, bk. 4, chs. iii, v; Moeller, II, 30–49, 94–98, 136–154; Schaff, IV, ch. ii; Trench, lects. iii, v.)

1) Dates of some conversions.

440 St. Patrick converted the Irish.
496 Clovis, King of the Franks, became a Christian.
587 Reccared, King of the Goths of Spain.
597 Ethelbert, King of Kent.
626 Edwin, King of Northumbria.
635 The English of Wessex.
681 The South Saxons.
878 Guthrum, the Dane, by the Peace of Wedmore.
912 Rollo, Duke of the Normans.
955 Boleslav II, King of the Bohemians.
972 The Hungarians.

2) The moral force of monastic life. (Allen, ch. viii.)

3 Foundation of missions kept pace with the fortunes of war.

a By 614 there were 112 bishoprics in Frankland alone.
b The Church soon became a great temporal power.

4 Effect of this period of conquest on the Church itself. (Church, 51–53; Compayré, 67–70; Fisher, 97, 144, 156, 160–161; Mullinger, 34–38.)

a State of learning, culture, and morality during this period.
b Social and religious life in the 7th Century. (Bury, II, 387–398.)

VI THE PRESERVATION OF LEARNING DURING THE PERIOD.

1 The order of Cassian, and his rule. (Syllabus, p. 54.)

2 St. Benedict founded the first Benedictine monastery at Monte Cassino [529]. (Montalambert, I, bk. iv; Mullinger, 41–47; Thatcher and Schwill, 326–335; Wishart, ch. iii; Woodhouse, 71–84.)

a Justinian closed the School of Athens the same year.
b The rule of St. Benedict. (Azarias, 10–28; Barnard’s Jr., XXIV, 525–544; Cutts, 6–17; Drane, I, ch. i; Henderson, 274–314; Hunt, ch. x; Jones, 94–99; Maitland; Putnam, I, 122–133; Schaff, III, 220–225; Smith, pt. 1, ch. vi; Woodhouse, 76–80.)
1) His order in part a reaction.

b The future particularly indebted to this order for three rules:

1) Imposing the duty of instructing novices.
2) Imposing the duty of transcribing manuscripts.
3) Provision for daily reading and study.

c Rapid spread of the order, carrying instruction over Europe and preserving learning during the Dark Ages. (Azarias, 3–36; Smith, pt. 1, ch. vii; Woodhouse, ch. iii.)

1) Work of the order in preserving learning. (Azarias, 3–36; *Clark, 9–22; †Clark, 144–148; Gairdner, 58–63; Gasquet, ch. ii; *Hallam, II, ch. i, secs. 1–15; †Hallam, II, ch. ix, pt. 1; Hodgetts, 92–108; Johnston, sec. 43; *Lacroix, 423–442; †Lacroix, 299–338; Lanciani, 200–205; Lecky, II, 212–221; Magevney, 1–24; Maitland; Putnam, I, 16–145; Sandys, 598–605; Wishart, ch. ix.)

2) Scarcity of books during the early Middle Ages. (†Clark; Gasquet, ch. i; †Hallam, II, ch. ix, pt. 1; Lanciani, 200–205; Maitland; Putnam, I, 133–145; Schaff, IV, 601–608; Symonds, 58–68.)

A MONK IN A Scriptorium.

A MEDIEVAL WRITER.

(From a MS. of Metrical Relations of Miracles of the Virgin Mary, now in the library of the city of Soissons, France.)

The monk is reading, seated before a bookcase, the table of which moves up and down on a screw. Upon this table is an inkstand, and below it apparently an inkbottle. The table has receptacles for books and paper or parchment. In the walls of the room are cupboards for books, a few of which can be seen.

(From a MS., No. 6985, in the National Library in Paris.)

The scribe is seated in a chair with a writing desk attached. In his hand is a pen, with which he is writing, and a knife for erasing. The table before him is covered with books.

VII MONASTIC AND EPISCOPAL SCHOOLS. (Azarias, 3–36; Denk; Dittes, 91–95; Guizot, II, lect. xvi; Kemp, ch. x; Plath, § 8; Putnam, I, 106–122; Regener, 31–35; Schiller, 35–60; Ziegler, 20–23.)

1 Origin of each. (Syllabus, pp. 53–54.)
2 Where established.
3 Nature of education provided.
a Its extent.
b For whom intended.
4 Value of these schools before Charlemagne. (Allen, 249–261.)

5 Suggestions as to Reading.

While the number of references is large, most of the works cited contain but a short chapter or a few pages bearing on this section of the Syllabus. Of the Sources, Henderson should be consulted for the rule of St. Benedict. Jones and Howland relate to the early Germans, and are based on Tacitus.

Of the Secondary Authorities in group 2, the most useful to the general student will be Adams for what the German added, Bryce for the attitude of the Germans toward the dying empire, Church for the influences acting on the barbarians, Taylor, Thomas, or Emerton for the influence of Roman law and order, and Abdy for survivals of Rome in Europe. Stillé has a good chapter on the invaders. Bury contains a picture of society in the seventh century. Guizot touches on nearly all of the above mentioned points. The two works by Hodgkin are excellent digests of parts of the author's great work on Italy and her Invaders, but, while these are short and very readable, they are, nevertheless, longer and more specialized than the general student will need. The same may be said of Ozanam, which is a detailed description of the early Germans.

Of the Secondary Authorities of group 3, almost all contain good short chapters. Kingsley gives a very good description of the daily life of a frontier monk. Montalambert is longer and more detailed than the others, but of no more value to the general student.

Of the Secondary Authorities in group 4, Cutts, Drane, the two works by Lacroix, Lanciani and Wishart are good on the work of the Benedictines. Azaria covers the entire Middle Age period, and would best be left until a later section.

Clark and Putnam are standard works on the history of book-making, the former being beautifully illustrated. *Clark is a very readable and valuable general lecture on medieval libraries. Magevney is a good brief statement, from a Catholic point of view, of the condition of learning during the Middle Ages. Maitland is a large work, written by an English church librarian at Canterbury, the purpose of which is to show that the Dark Ages were not nearly so dark as is commonly supposed.

A beginner student should read with a view to obtaining a clear idea of the nature of the invasions, the beginnings of the process of the assimilation of the invaders, and the preservation of such learning as remained until the world was ready to use it.
XIII ENGLAND AND IRELAND DURING THE EARLY MIDDLE AGES.

I THE EARLY IRISH AND SCOTTISH SCHOOLS. (Drane, I, ch. ii; Edgar, 8–17; Fisher, 96–97; Healy, Laurie, 32–36; Lawless, 42–49; Montalambert, I, bk. viii, chs. ii, iii; Newman, I, 116–129; Sandys, 438–442; West, 28–31.)

1 Christian civilization and monastic life introduced into Ireland [c. 425 A. D.], probably via Marseilles.
   a St. Patrick preached Christianity to the Irish [440.]
   b Monasteries soon became numerous. (Skene, II, 62–87.)

2 Famous monastic schools of the 6th and 7th centuries. (Healy.)
   a Ireland at this time the center of learning of the western world. (Skene, II, ch. x.)
   b Schools destroyed by the Danes. (See Syllabus, p. 60.)

Suggestions as to Reading.

Of the two Sources cited, Asse is interesting as a picture, by a contemporary, of the time of King Alfred, but for the purposes of this chapter is less valuable than a number of the Secondary Authorities. Bede is quite valuable, and contains interesting reference to the condition of learning at the time.

Of the important Secondary Authorities in group 2, Besant, Conybeare, Harrison, and Thorpe are particularly good on the work of King Alfred. Besant is an excellent condensed statement, and will be one of the general student’s best references. Conybeare contains excellent chapters, based on a study of the sources. Harrison is an interesting and scholarly sketch, and has particular reference to Alfred as the father of English literature. Thorpe is an English translation of a German work, and contains a good chapter on Alfred as the instructor of his people. Abdy, Bowker, Hunt, and Morley contain fair chapters on the same topic. Healy is a large and able work on the early schools and scholars of Ireland, and should be consulted by anyone looking for extensive and detailed information on the subject. Skene contains an excellent chapter on the same topic, and being more condensed, will probably be more serviceable to the general student. Plummer’s introduction is an excellent short summary of the life and work of Bede, and his place in history. Drake, Hazlitt, and Gairdner contain good general chapters on the work of Bede, Alfred, the early monks, and the schools of Ireland. Leach is a very interesting article on the old cathedral school at York.

Of the General Works, in group 3, Church, Edgar, Laurie, Montmorency, Sandys, and West contain the best chapters, all being somewhat general in their nature. Hodgatts has particular reference to Bede and the early monasteries. Pearson contains a fair general chapter on King Alfred. Giles is chiefly a picture of the state of society at the time, and refers as much to Frankland as to England. Monnier has one chapter on Alcuin at York.

The general student would probably do best to read the citations in Skene, Plummer, and Besant, and then follow the suggestions of the pages of the Syllabus for more detailed reading or for information on particular points.

5 Suggestions as to Reading.

Of the Sources, Eginoard is a valuable short life of Charlemagne, written by a contemporary. Munro is a good short collection of laws and capitularies. The German sources contain good selections from Alcuin's writings. Of the Secondary Authorities of first importance, Mombert, Mullinger, and West are very valuable. Mombert is the standard history of Charlemagne, and contains valuable illustrations of Alcuin's teaching. Mullinger is very valuable on the educational efforts of Charlemagne. West is a more popular work than either of the above, but almost equally valuable. The special student will find Monnier still worth consulting, though the work has been superseded in large measure by English writers. Putnam is very good on Alcuin's work in multiplying books, and Adams contains a good general chapter on Charlemagne's work.

Of the Secondary Authorities in group 3, Davis, Drake, Emerton, Guizot, Morley, and Townsend contain good general chapters on the work of Charlemagne and Alcuin, and the life of the period, and one or more of these may be found valuable in supplementing the authorities of group 2. For the general student they are to be preferred for the life and times of Charlemagne, though usually inferior for the work of Alcuin. Sandys is very good, but relates largely to Alcuin's literary work, and his relation to his time. Fisher and Giles relate to the life of the times. Azarias, Odam, and Specht contain brief sections on the schools of the period. The chapters in Comar and Williams are short, general, and unsatisfactory. The article by Azarias covers the schools of the entire medieval period, and might profitably be left for later reading.

Of the Secondary Authorities in group 4, Allen, Dury, Hauresa, Henderson, and Lorenz contain from a few pages to a short general chapter on Charlemagne and his historical importance. Newman treats of the effect of Charlemagne's efforts to advance learning. Magevney and Maitland deal briefly with educational conditions of the period. Rashdall has a good but very brief summary of educational conditions up to the year 1000. The German texts contain only short and very general articles, but will afford good practice in reading German.

The beginning student will probably find West the most satisfactory single reference, though Mombert ought to be consulted for examples of Alcuin's teaching. Adams, one of the more important secondary authorities of group 3, will be good to supplement the above. For more detailed suggestions as to reading consult the pages of the Syllabus.

4 Suggestions as to Reading.

Of the Authorities in the first group, Allain, †Azarias, Laurie, Specht, and Salvioli are very good. The chapter in Allain on small schools during the Middle Ages is abstracted in †Azarias. Laurie’s account of the inner work of the Christian school is very readable. Specht is an old and valuable work, and contains about 50 pages on the different types of schools of the period. Mattre is another old work which is still of value. Salvioli is excellent on Italian schools. Just deals largely with the child’s side of medieval education, as does Field also. The latter is a very readable book. Allen has a somewhat general chapter on the schools from the second to the tenth centuries, and Poole gives a good description of the status of higher education from the eighth to the tenth centuries.

Of the Authorities in group 2, Drane (reproduced in Barnard) has a good chapter on the conditions which followed after the death of Alcuin. West is very good on the successors of Alcuin. Mullinger has a good section on Rabanus Maurus, and the essay by Tünnau is a careful and valuable study. With so little written on the work of this famous man, these two references are of particular value. Sandys contains a sketch of Maurus and Gerbert which is good, though quite brief. Townsend has a good chapter on the tenth century revival. Compayré has a few pages on the ignorance of the Middle Ages, while Maitland points out what the period had. Schmid describes tenth and eleventh century conditions at length.

Of the Authorities in group 3, Capes has an excellent general chapter on monastic life, friars, pilgrims, and the social influence of the Church of the Middle Ages. Church’s Anselm is a valuable work, and the chapters which picture life in an eleventh century monastery and describe the work of Anselm at the famous monastery at Bec are well worth reading. Gasquet’s two chapters on medieval monastic libraries and the monastic scriptorium are also very readable and useful. Gibbon describes the life of a medieval monk. Jessopp’s chapter on the daily life in a medieval monastery is a valuable contribution, and well worth reading. Kingsley, mentioned previously on p. 86, gives a good picture of the daily life of a frontier monk—St. Sturm, founder of Fulda. Healy contains an interesting chapter describing monastic life in the sixth century in Ireland. Putnam is a standard history, and gives a somewhat detailed account of the making of books in a medieval monastery, the scriptorium, the library at York, monastic schools after Alcuin, and notes on some of the great libraries of the period. Scheffel’s Eckhardt is a historical novel which presents a strong picture of medieval monastic life. All of the references in this group are quite valuable.

The general student, beginning the study, would do well to include the citations in †Azarias, Drane, West, Capes, and Townsend in his reading.
XVI STATE OF HIGHER LEARNING DURING THE MIDDLE AGES: THE SEVEN LIBERAL ARTS.

(Davidson, 237–247; Laurie, 54–74; Meiser; Parker; Specht, 81–150; West, 1–27; Ziegler, 28–29.)

I THE SEVEN LIBERAL ARTS, AND PHILOSOPHY.

1 An inheritance and an evolution.
   a When the number became fixed.

2 The curriculum of the Middle Ages.
   a The Trivium:—Grammar, Dialectic, Rhetoric. (Specht, 86–126.)
   b The Quadrivium:—Geometry, Arithmetic, Astronomy, Music.
      (Specht, 127–149.)
   c Philosophy:—Physical Science, Metaphysics and Ethics, Theology.

3 Importance of grammar in the Middle Ages. (Sandys, 638–643.)

II DEVELOPMENT AMONG THE GREEKS.

1 The two divisions of education among the early Greeks.

2 Aristotle [c. 325 B. C.] distinguished between elementary and advanced studies, and closely approached the Seven Liberal Arts. (See Syllabus, p. 33.)

3 Teles [260 B. C.] wrote that the studies were:— a For boys:—Letters, Music, Drawing.
   b For youths:—Arithmetic, Geometry.

4 Philo Judæus, a contemporary of Christ, named:— a The Encyclical Arts, consisting of:—Grammar, Rhetoric, Dialectic, Arithmetic, Geometry, Music.
   b Philosophy, consisting of:—Physics, Logic, Ethics.

5 Sextus Empiricus, a Greek teacher at Athens and Alexandria, in the latter part of the 2d century, gave:—
   b The Sciences and Philosophy:—Logic, Physics, Ethics.

III DEVELOPMENT AMONG THE ROMANS. (Parker.)

1 Cato the Censor [c. 160 B. C.] outlined the Roman curriculum of his time. (Syllabus, p. 40.)

2 Varro [c. 50 B. C.]. His Nine Liberal Disciplines. (Syllabus, p. 40.)

3 Dionysius Thrax, in his Grammar [c. 90 B. C.], enumerated the Liberal Arts, as:—Astronomy, Geometry, Music, Philosophy, Medicine, Grammar, Rhetoric.

An allegorical representation of the progress and degrees of education, from an illuminated picture in the 1508 [Bible] edition of the Margarita Philosophica of Gregory de Reisch, which is substantially the same as in the earlier editions.

The youth, having mastered the Hornbook and the rudiments of learning, advances toward the temple of knowledge. Wisdom is about to place the key in the lock of the door of the temple. Across the door is written the word congruitas, signifying Grammar. ("Gramaire first hath for to teche to speke upon congruite.") On the first and second floors of the temple he studies the Grammar of Donatus, and of Priscian, and at the first stage at the left on the third floor he studies the Logic of Aristotle, followed by the Rhetoric and Poetry of Tully, thus completing the Trivium. The Arithmetic of Boethius also appears on the third floor. On the fourth floor of the temple he completes the studies of the Quadrivium, taking in order the Music of Pythagoras, Euclid's Geometry, and Ptolemy's Astronomy. The student now advances to the study of Philosophy, studying successively Physics, Seneca's Morals, and the Theology (or Metaphysics) of Peter Lombard, the last being the goal toward which all has been directed.
PHILOSOPHY AND THE LIBERAL ARTS, vs. THE POETS.

(Reproduced from Straub & Keller’s Strassburg [1899] folio edition of Hortus Deliciarum, a pictorial encyclopedia composed by the Abbess Herrad of Landsperg [d. 1185] for the nuns of Mont St. Odile in Alsace. The original MS. was destroyed during the bombardment of Strassburg in 1870.)

In the upper half of the inner circle Philosophy, represented by a woman, whose crown is parted into three heads, Ethics, Logic, and Physics, is seated on her throne. In her hands she holds a band bearing the inscription: Omnia sapientia a Domino Deo est; soli quod desiderant facere possunt sapientes. Below this, and on each side of the throne, are the words: Septem fontes sapientiae fluunt de philosophia, quae dicuntur liberales artes. Spiritus Sanctus inventor est septem liberalium artium, quae sunt Grammatica, Rhetorica, Dialectica, Musica, Arithmetica, Geometria, Astronomia. In the lower half of the inner circle Socrates and Plato are seated at desks with books open before them. Above them the line reads: Naturam universae rei quem docuit Philosophia. The outer circle is filled with a series of seven arches, and under each is a personification of one of the Liberal Arts, with her emblems in her hands. Grammar, the first of the Arts, holds a book and a bundle of switches; Rhetoric holds a stylus and a tablet for writing; Dialectic holds a dog's head; Music holds a cithara and has other musical instruments on each side of her; Arithmetic holds what appears to be a kind of counting device; Geometry holds a pair of compasses; and above Astronomy are the stars. Below and outside the outer circle are four poets or “magicians,” each seated at a desk writing, with an evil spirit in the form of a raven hovering near his ear and prompting him in writing his poetry. This last is typical of the conflict which existed for centuries between the Liberal Arts and the Authors, or Literature proper.
4 Studies of Roman schools in the last century, B. C. (Syllabus, p. 43.)
5 Seneca [65 A. D.] enumerated the following:— a Secondary Instruction, consisting of Music, Geometry, Arithmetic, Astronomy.
   b Philosophy, consisting of Moral, Natural, Rational (Dialectic and Rhetoric.)
6 The studies enumerated by Quintilian [100 A. D.]. (Syllabus, p. 44.)

IV DEVELOPMENT AMONG THE LATER PAGANS AND EARLY CHRISTIANS. WRITERS, STUDIES, AND TEXT-BOOKS OF THE MIDDLE AGES. (Günther, on Mathematics; Meier, 122–135; Mullinger, I, 21–33; Newman, I, 105–115; Rashdall, I, 32–37; Regener, 35–40; Reichling, iii–xix; Sandys, 638–650; Schaff, IV, 604–615; Schütze, pt. 2; Smith and Cheetham, art. Schools; Taylor, 45–55; West, 4–27; Williams, 53–56.)
   a His position as the instructor of the Middle Ages.
2 Orosius [fl. c. 416]. His Histories.
3 Martianus Capella [c. 425] first mentioned the Seven Liberal Arts.
   a These probably the studies of the better Roman schools of the time.
   b Medicine and Architecture excluded.
   c His De Nuptiis Philologiae et Mercurii. (Parker, 437–461; Sandys, 228–230; Taylor, 49–55.)
4 Bethius [c. 475–524] first used the term Quadrivium, and clearly distinguished the two groups of studies. (Sandys, 237–243, 507.)
   a His importance as a medieval authority.
   b His versions or adaptations of Arithmetic, Geometry, the Logic of Aristotle, and Commentaries on Aristotle, Cicero, etc.
   c These the standard text-books throughout the Middle Ages.
5 Cassiodorus [468–568]. (Sandys, 244–256.)
   a Gave the same list as Capella, and fixed the number at seven by Scriptural authority.
6 Isidore, Bishop of Seville [d. 636].
   a Same list as Cassiodorus.
   b His Etymologies a thesaurus for centuries.
      1) Nature of this work. (Sandys, 442–444.)
   c Isidore closed the development of Christian learning.
   d Bethius, Cassiodorus, and Isidore, and later, Capella and Maurus, the standard authorities up to 1300.
7 Rabanus Maurus and his encyclopedia, De Universo [819]. (Freudentgen; Mullinger, 138–156; Schütze, pt. 2; Tünnau; West, 156–164; Syllabus, p. 78.)
8 Dante summed up the ancient and medieval educational systems under Trivium, Quadrivium, and Philosophy.

THE CAMP OF WISDOM.

Suggestions as to Reading.

Davidson, Laurie, Parker, Sandys, Taylor, and West are to be recommended for the Seven Liberal Arts. Parker being particularly good. Rashdall, Regener, and Williams give good brief summaries. Sandys is particularly good on the study of grammar, and the conflict between the Arts and the Authors during the Middle Ages. Specht is very good, though quite long. Mullinger, Schaff, and Smith & Cheetham are good on the text-books of the Middle Ages. Parker and Taylor describe Capella's famous book, while Mullinger and West are best for Maurus. Türnau, in German, is a valuable contribution on Maurus. The full citations in the pages of the Syllabus will give sufficient additional suggestions.
XVII ARAB LEARNING [800–1300]: CONDITION OF CHRISTIAN EUROPE.

(Crichton, ch. xiii; Davidson, 133–149; Haneberg; Hungerford; Lewes, II, 33–70; Ribera; Schmid, II, Pt. 1, 570–611; Sismondi, I, ch. ii.)

A INTELLECTUAL ADVANCES OF THE SARACENS.

I THE MIGRATIONS AND CONQUESTS.

1 Dates of. (Syllabus, p. 60.)
2 Greatest extent of their conquests. (Freeman, map, xvi.)
3 Division of the Empire [755]. The capitals.
   a At Cordova in Spain.
      1) Ommiad line ruled from 755–1038, when displaced by the Moors, who continued until displaced by the Christians.
   b At Bagdad on the Tigris.
      1) Haroun-al-Raschid became Caliph in 786. After his death Caliphate disintegrated.
   c In 9th century a Caliphate established at Cairo.
4 Golden Age at Bagdad under Caliph al Mamun [813–833]. (Coppée, II, bk. ix, ch. i.)
5 Golden Age in Spain between 750 and 1150.
6 Contact with Hindoo, Byzantine, and Alexandrian learning.
7 The great revival of arts, science, and letters. (Huart, ch. ix; Hungerford.) To what due.
8 Almost no records bearing on Arab education previous to the time of Mohammed.

II INTELLECTUAL AND SOCIAL CONDITION. (Ameer Ali, chs. xxv, xxxi; Burke, I, 167–171, 205–208; Coppée, II, bk. ix, ch. ii, 434–436; Draper, I, 400–412, II, 30–38, 40–44; Duruy, 99–104; Ribera; Routledge, 55–56; Sismondi, I. ch. ii; Townsend, ch. ix.)

1 A picture of Cordova at the height of its prosperity.
2 Social habits of the people.
3 Libraries at Cairo, Cordova, and elsewhere.
4 Nature of their literature. (Huart; Le Bon, ch. ii.)
5 Their architecture. (Le Bon, ch. viii.)
   a The Alhambra a type.
6 Their arts, industries, and commerce. (Coppée, II, bk. x, ch. iv; Le Bon, chs. vii, ix.)
ARAB LEARNING.

III WORK IN MATHEMATICS. (Ameer Ali, chs. xxv, xxxi; Ball, 140-156; Burke, I, 205-208, 284-288; Cajori, 84-116; Coppée, II, bk. x, ch. ii; Draper, II, 38-50; Huart, 291-295; Lacroix, ch. v; Le Bon, chs. i, iii; Ribera; Routledge, 56-65.)

1 Algebra obtained from India [c. 800] and perfected.
   a Arabic numerals derived from the same source.
2 Mohammed-ibn-Musa [c. 830] wrote an Arithmetic and an Algebra.
   a Gave rules for solving quadratics and extracting the square root.
   b Early European books based on this.
3 Tabit-ibn-Korra [839-901] translated Greek mathematical works and wrote original works of merit.
4 Abul Wefa [940-998, Bagdad] introduced trigonometric functions and constructed tables for calculating tangents and cotangents.
5 Ibn Jouinis [c. 1000, Cairo] introduced use of sine.
7 Arabic mathematicians determined value of π to be 3,927:1,250.

IV WORK IN ASTRONOMY. (Ameer Ali, chs. xxv, xxxi; Coppée, II, 294-295, 375-380; Draper, II, 38-50; Huart, 295-306; Lacroix, IV, ch. ii; Le Bon, chs. iii, iv; Ribera; Routledge, 56-65.)

1 A degree of the earth’s surface measured on the shores of the Red Sea [c. 830]. Result 56 1/3 miles.
2 Obliquity of ecliptic calculated [830].
3 Length of year determined [880].
4 Rate of progression of equinoxes corrected.
5 Ptolemy’s astronomical tables corrected at Cairo [1000] by Ibn Jouinis.
6 Theory that planets move in ellipses set forth.
7 Observatory tower built at Seville [1196]. “‘Tubes with glasses’ used for observation [c. 1250].
8 Gnomon, Armillary Sphere, Mural Quadrants.
9 Geography taught from globes in the schools.

V WORK IN CHEMISTRY AND PHYSICS. (Ameer Ali, chs. xxv, xxxi; Coppée, II, bk. x, ch. iii; Draper, I, 400-412, II, 38-50; Huart, 313-317; Lacroix, II, ch. ii; Lacroix, ch. viii; Le Bon, ch. v; Ribera; Routledge, 56-65.)

1 Geber [c. 800] discovered nitric acid and aqua regia, oxidized mercury, and prepared caustic alkali from plants.
2 Rhazes [c. 900] discovered sulphuric acid and alcohol.
3 Properties of gases understood. Many advances made.
4 Table of specific gravities calculated [995].
5 Alhazen [c. 1100, Spain] wrote a work on optics.
ARAB LEARNING.

a Explained refraction and reflection, theory of vision, and use of the retina.
b Calculated the height of the atmosphere as 58 1/2 miles.
6 The pendulum applied to clocks and time calculated [1259].

VI WORK IN MEDICINE AND SURGERY. (Ameer Ali, chs. xxv, xxxi; Coppée, II, bk. x, ch. iii; Draper, I, 400–412, II, 38–50; Huart, 306–313; *Lacroix, II, ch. iii, IV, ch. i; †Lacroix, chs. vi, vii; Le Bon, ch. vi; Ribera; Routledge, 56–65.)
1 Study began with Al Mansur [754–775, Bagdad]. a Rapid advances made.
b Jews of their schools long famous as practitioners.
1) Tolerance indicated.
2 Difficult operations performed in obstetrics and general surgery.
3 Properties of many drugs understood. (*Lacroix, II, ch. iv.)
4 A Pharmacopoeia written.
5 Hospitals.

VII THEIR SCHOOLS. (Ameer Ali, chs. xxv, xxxi; Burke, I, 284–288; Coppée, II, 279–281, 433–437; Draper, II, 36–38; Ribera.)
1 Ali [602–661], the third successor of Mohammed, a patron of learning. Some of his sayings which have survived:—
   “A man’s learning is more valuable than his gold.”
   “To the dominion of science there is no end.”
   “He dies not who gives his life for science.”
   “Eminence in science is the highest of honors.”

2 Haroun-al-Raschid enacted [780, Bagdad] that every mosque should have a school attached to it.
3 Academies established for tuition pupils.
4 Higher schools established in the leading cities, such as Bagdad, Cairo [988], Cordova, Granada, Toledo, and Seville.
a Teachers mostly Jews.
b Work consisted of lectures on Literature, Rhetoric, Grammar, Composition, Mathematics, Astronomy, and general Science.
c Medicine taught in professional schools.
d Arab scholars wrote dictionaries, lexicons, and encyclopedias. (Huart, 317–322.)
5 Education of women.
6 Work of the Mohammedans in gathering together Greek and Oriental science and preserving it through the Dark Ages analogous to the work of the Church and the Franks in preserving Roman institutions and Roman law.
CHRISTIAN EUROPE AT THE TIME.

B CONDITION OF CHRISTIAN EUROPE AT THE TIME.

I CHRISTIAN CONDITIONS AND KNOWLEDGE.  (Draper, II, 27–28, 115–119; and Hallam, II, ch. ix, pt. i; Trench, ch. xxviii.)

1 Intellectual and social conditions compared.  (Cutts, 54–92; Hallam, ch. ix, pt. 1, second half; Schaff, IV, ch. xiii; Syllabus, p. 90.)

a Superstition of the age, the people, the clergy, and the monks.
   (Burr; Fisher, 229–230; Franck; Gibbon, III, ch. xxxvii, 682–687; Laurox, 200–264; Milman, VI, bk. 14, chs. i, ii; Moeller, II, 210–221, 331–337; Munro.)

1) Worship of saints and relics. Miracles.
   a) Religion a crude polytheism.
   b) Great development of the sensuous and the symbolic.

2) Trials by combat.
   a) Private warfare. "Truce of God" established [1041].

3) Trials by ordeals. (Henderson, 314–319; Howland, 7–22.)
   a) Forbidden by the Church [1218].

b) Filth; lack of sanitation in town and homes. (See 5, below.)

2 Mathematics. (Ball, 158–167; Laurox, 77–104; Laurox, 161–202.)

a) Roman numerals used. (Cajori, 117–124.)

b) No advance until influenced by Arab learning.
   1) Translation of Arab mathematical works. (†Cajori, 111–122, 131–138.)

3 Astronomy and Geography. (†Laurox, IV, ch. ii; †Laurox, 265–295; White, I, chs. ii–iv.)

a) Belief as to the shape and position of the earth.

b) Belief as to the purpose of the earth and heavens.

   1) Consequent disbelief in unseen stars.

   c) Eclipses, meteors, and comets terrifying sights.

   1) Comet excommunicated by Pope Calixtus.

   d) The Copernican theory condemned [1616] as "absurd in philosophy" and "expressly contrary to Holy Scripture."

   e) The Encyclopedia of Bartholomew Anglicus [fl. 1230–1250] representative of the most advanced knowledge of the best scholars of the time. (Steele.)

4 Chemistry and Physics. (†Laurox, II, chs. ii, iv; †Laurox, 105–133, 174–199; †Laurox, ch. viii; Traill, II, 74–82, 370–375, III, 325–333; White, I, ch. xii.)

a) General belief in magic and witchcraft. Diabolic action.

   1) Pope John XXII [1317] issued a Bull against the alchemists.

b) Attitude of Christian Europe toward inquiry shown in the treatment of Roger Bacon. (Syllabus, p. 105.)

c) Physics a 17th century science.
d Chemistry a 19th century science.
5 Medicine and Surgery. (*Lacroix, II, ch. iii, IV, ch. i; †Lacroix, 134–173; ‡Lacroix, 203–291; Morley, VII, 26–27, 40–41; Steele, Traill, II, 82–86; White, II, chs. xiii–xv.)
   a Miracle cures common.
   b Disease attributed to Satanic influence.
      1) Schedule of prayers for the cure of various diseases.
      2) Efficacy of the royal touch. Sacred pools, etc.
   d Dissection long prohibited as sacrilegious.
      1) Discovery of the circulation of the blood first published by Harvey in 1628.
   e Treatment of the insane.
      1) Casting out of devils by whipping and torture. (White, II, ch. xv.)
6 Characteristics of Christian education. (Syllabus, p. 81.)

II INFLUENCE OF ARAB LEARNING ON EUROPE. (*Ball, ch. x; †Ball, 2–11; *Cajori, 124–128; †Cajori, 111–122, 131–138; Coppée, II, 370–374; Draper, II, chs. ii, iv; Lacroix, all citations to; Sandys, 539–550; Steele; Townsend, ch. ix.)

1 European monks went to Spain for study, and brought back translations of Arab books. The work of:—
      (Franck, 1–46.)
      1) Accused of transactions with the devil.
   b Adelard, an English monk, at Cordova [c. 1120].
      1) His Arithmetic and Algebra used in Europe until 1533.
      2) His Euclid in general use in the Universities by 1300.
   c Abraham ben Ezra [1097–1167].
   d Gerard [1114–1187]. Translated Ptolemy and Alhazen.
   e Leonardo of Pisa [1175–1230], whose Algebra [1202] practically introduced the Arabic system into Europe.

2 Frederic II [1194–1250] employed a staff of Jewish physicians to translate Arab works.
   1) His great work for learning.

3 Medical books used at Montpellier, and how obtained. (Rashdall, II, Pt. 1, 115–124, Pt. 2, 780–785.)

4 Translations of Aristotle. Work of other translators. (Sandys, 539–550, 563–566.)

5 Suggestions as to Reading.

Of the references in group 1, the student will probably find Ameer Ali, Burke, Coppée, Draper, Routledge, or Diamond the most useful. The first is good on the social and intellectual conditions at Bagdad and Granada, the second gives a brilliant picture of Cordova, the third gives a most attractive account of Arab life and learning. The fourth is a good condensed statement of Arab scientific advances, and the fifth contains a graphic account of the civilization of the Arabs. Ribera is an illuminating work, and ought to be translated into English. Le Bon is a large and excellent work on the civilization of the Arabs. It is beautifully illustrated, and the student could look the book over with profit, even though he does not read French. Crichton and Haneberg are old standards, though now in part superseded by more recent works. Davidson has a brief general chapter, but lacks sufficient detail.

Of the references in group 2, Burr, Henderson, Howland, and Munro are short collections of illustrative sources, giving the manner of procedure in witch-trials, ordeals, etc., and illustrative monastic tales of the period. These are valuable by way of illustration. Gibbon has a few pages on the superstitions of the period. Fisher has a good section on the religious life of the Middle Ages, and the work of the Church in securing better conditions. Fisher is always valuable because of his absence of partisanship. Milman has attempted to give a statement of the belief of the Church and the nature of popular belief at about the year 1200. Moeller has given a somewhat similar statement for the periods from the eighth to the thirteenth century.

Of the references in group 3, Hallam, Traill, and White will be most useful. Traill is a very valuable collection of material illustrative of English life, and though the citations are usually quite short, can almost always be consulted with profit. White is a monumental work, and will be the standard work on the subject for a long while to come. The student can consult this work with profit, even though he has time to read but part of a chapter. Steele is a valuable reprint of a thirteenth century encyclopedia, and gives an epitome of the science, geography, mathematics, and manners of the period. Franck is an old standard on the life and time of Gerbert. Hallam's ninth chapter is another old standard, often severely criticized, which describes conditions in Europe between 800 and 1300. Morley has a brief section on old medical knowledge, and Schaff has a general section on the state of learning of the period.

Of the references in group 4, Ball and Cajori deal with mathematical knowledge; Draper is general and brief, but good; Townsend has a good chapter on the influence of the translation of Aristotle; Rashdall's note on the medical books used at Montpellier is very interesting; and the works by Lacroix are of much value, and show the Arab influences in many fields. Sandy's contains a very satisfactory account of the translations.

The general student, beginning the study, would probably best read Routledge and one of the histories in group 1; Fisher, Milman, or Moeller in group 2; the citations in Traill or portions of White in group 3; and then select from group 4. Le Bon and Steele can be looked over with profit, even though not read.

6 Suggestions as to Reading.

The Sources all furnish good illustrative material.

Of the Authorities in group 2, the general student will find the citations in Adams, Cornish, Cutts, the two histories by Emerton, Gautier, Henderson, the books by Lacroix, and Watson most valuable. Emerton gives a good brief statement of the Feudal system. Adams and Watson also contain good chapters. For chivalry, Gautier is a standard history. Cornish is a recent history of chivalry, which contains a good chapter on chivalric education. Cutts, Henderson, and Watson contain good descriptive chapters. Adams is very good on the reopening of commerce following the Crusades. The works by Lacroix contain excellent illustrative material on the entire section of the Syllabus.

Of the Authorities in group 3, Ashley is one of the best for general use. Gross is excellent, but quite long. Cutts and Mrs. Green are good on the medieval merchant. Scaife is very good for details as to commerce. Stillé and Zimmermann also contain good chapters.

Of the Authorities in group 4, Edgar, Grant and Nohle will be found most satisfactory by the general student. Kaemmel and Schmid give detailed information as to the schools of the period. Of the authorities in group 5, Francke is good on medieval society, and Traill contains many good short citations. Trench contains a good short chapter on the Crusades. The student should consult the pages of the Syllabus for more detailed suggestions as to reading and for references on minor points.

ST. THOMAS AQUINAS ENTHRONED.

CHRIST IN GLORY.

Aristotle, St. Thomas Aquinas, Plato.
Admiring Dominican.
Averroés, Admiring Dominicans.

(An Altar-piece by Francesco Traini [1345] in the Church of S. Caterina, at Pisa. Reproduced from Rosini’s Pittura Italiana.)

Beneath “Christ in Glory” are six figures bending forward from the sky and holding out the books of the Scriptures which bear their names. To each of the six a ray of light falls from Christ. From each of these figures a ray of light proceeds to the seated figure of St. Thomas Aquinas. Three rays also proceed from Christ direct to him. On the lap of St. Thomas Aquinas are a number of his books, while in his hands he holds his great and unfinished work, the Summa contra Gentiles, and points to the opening sentence: Veritatem meditabitur gutter meum, et labia mea detestabitur impium (Prov. viii, 7). Two other rays of light are shown as coming to St. Thomas from the books held up by Aristotle and Plato, who stand to the left and right respectively. From St. Thomas’ great book falls a heavy line, a flash of refutation rather than a beam of light, which strikes a book lying on the ground beside its author, Averroés, who seems to be writhing in pain. A number of rays of light may be seen descending from the works of St. Thomas on the two crowds of admiring and adoring Dominicans who stand below on the earth.
SCHOLASTICISM.

b Thomas Aquinas. [Italian; Dominican; 1225–1274.] (Sandys, 560–562; Townsend, chs. xiii, xiv.)
1) He brought Scholasticism to its highest development by harmonizing Aristotelianism with the doctrines of the Church.

SCHOLASTICISM.

SEEBOHM, F. Era of the Protestant Revolution. [New York, 1875.]

5 Suggestions as to Reading.

Of the Authorities in group 1, all are good, though quite long. Erdmann is a translation of a standard German work; Hauréau is an old but valuable French work; Maurice traces the history of Scholasticism by eras; Schmid is somewhat general on the period; and Townsend is very good on the men, their problems, and their work.

Of the Authorities in group 2, the student will probably find Emerton, Fischer, Milman, and Seth the most satisfactory. The chapter in Emerton is a good, brief, concise statement of the work and service of Scholasticism. Fischer contains a good clear account. Milman is very good, and Seth is an excellent summary. The chapter in Thatcher and Schwill is a good short general statement. McCabe’s Abelard is a valuable work. Mullinger is good on the early Scholastics. Rasdall has a very good chapter on Abelard and the problems of his time. Poole and Trench contain good general chapters on Abelard and the early Schoolmen. Lewes contains a very readable account, covering the whole Scholastic period.

Of the Authorities in group 3, Drane is very good on the beginnings of the movement and on the work of the Dominicans. The chapters in Fisher and Moeller are short and general, but are good brief accounts of the whole movement. The two works by Lacroix are general, but contain good illustrative material. Stillé has a good brief chapter on the Schoolmen and the Universities. Sandys is an excellent book—an example of painstaking scholarship, and contains a number of citations which are good, though usually quite brief. Guizot contains a good chapter on the life, doctrines, and influence of Étienne. Ueberweg covers the whole period in a concise manner, but the style is not so attractive as in Fisher or Moeller.

The minor works in group 4 refer to particular points, which are indicated in the Syllabus, with the exception of Kurtz, Regener and Seebohm. The chapters in these are so brief as to be of little value, except that Regener will afford good practice in reading German.

The general student, beginning the study, or the general reader wishing to get an idea of the period, would probably do best to read Rasdall or Townsend, or one or more of the general chapters by Emerton, Fisher, Fischer, Milman, Moeller, or Seth. Green, Mullinger, Routledge, and Sandys will give a good idea as to the work of Bacon. The pages of the Syllabus should be consulted for more detailed suggestions as to the reading.

XX. THE RISE OF THE UNIVERSITIES.

(Barnard's Jr., XX, 737-785; Davidson, 168-174; Denile; Dittes, 104-106; Döllinger, 1-49; Emerton, 465-471; Hamlyn, 1-38; *Lacroix, I, ch. vii; †Lacroix, 1-40; Nohle, 11-28; Stillé, 376-384; Tout, ch. xviii; also Encyclopedia Britannica, article Universities.)

I CAUSES CONTRIBUTING TO THE RISE OF THE UNIVERSITIES.

(Compayré 24-25; Emerton, 465-471; Laurie, 91-105.)

1 Work of the Church in making a commonwealth of Europe.
2 The growth of commerce and the increase of wealth.
3 Increase in the quantity of knowledge.
4 The Scholastic movement. (Syllabus, sect. XIX.)
5 The organization of municipalities, securing and developing civil freedom.
6 The general movement toward associations.
7 Rapid development of the cathedral schools. (Syllabus, p. 79.)
8 The growing desire for broader education, free from the influence of the Church.

II EVOLUTION OF THE FIRST UNIVERSITIES. (Barnard's Jr., IX, 49-56; Compayré, 46-69; Denile, I, 1-29; Dittes, 104-106; Emerton, 465-471; Hamlyn, 1-38; Kaufmann, I, 344-409; Laurie, 91-105, 171-191; †Mullinger, I, 35-72; †Mullinger, ch. 1; Rashdall, I, 4-19, II, Pt. 1, 1-7; Schmid, II, Pt. 1, 339-425.)

1 Long local evolution usually preceded the university constitution.
   (See table of dates of foundation, p. 108.)
   a Work of Abelard at Paris. (Compayré, 3-24; Newman, I, 192-202; Rashdall, I, 25-68.)
   b Work of Constantine at Salerno. (Laurie, 106-123; Rashdall, I, 75-86.)
   c Development began with specialization. (Sandys, 582-584.)
      1) Salerno; Bologna; Paris.
   d Evolution of the studium publicum or studium generale out of the cathedral or monastery schools. (Barnard's Jr., IX, 45-56.)

2 The technical date of foundation.
   a How founded. When founded. By whom chartered. (See table, p. 108.)
      1) Foundation charter of University of Heidelberg [1385]. (Henderson, 262-267.)

12 Suggestions as to Reading.

Of the General Histories of the Universities mentioned in group 1, Rashdall is the standard work and is always worth consulting. Laurie and Companys are the best of the shorter histories. Laurie is a useful short book, despite a number of minor inaccuracies. Companys is better on the organization and internal life of the Universities. Bannerman, a prize essay of a quarter of a century ago, is readable and useful. The short summary Deniile is a great work, though never completed beyond 1400 and somewhat marred by polemic zeal. It is especially valuable on the origin of the universities. The extracts from Savignys great work, as contained in Barnard, relate chiefly to the Italian universities. Schmid contains a long and detailed sketch of the development of the universities and their internal organization, with a good bibliography.

Of the Authorities in group 2, containing short general articles, none are of any special value except as they may relate to particular points. The articles in Lacroix are well illustrated; Jebb is a good but very general sketch; Tout deals with the Mendicants and Scholastics in the early universities; Williams has a fair general article; Traill contains numerous short citations on English university life; and Drane is general on early Oxford and Paris. With a few exceptions, better information on the same points will be found in Companys, or Laurie, or Rashdall than in the references of this group.

Of the Authorities in group 3, relating to instruction, libraries, and student life, all will be found useful. Azarias contains a review of Deniiles work, reprinted from the Am. Cathe. Q. Rec., and dealing largely with medieval university life, and a chapter on the development of the colleges. *Burrowes describes Oxford in the twelfth century, and reproduces a catalogue of Grocyns books. †Burrowes contains a catalogue of Wykeham's books at New College. ‡Clark is a very interesting short general lecture on medieval libraries, while §Clark is a valuable and a magnificently illustrated history of libraries in all times. Fletcher contains a catalogue of the Oriel College Library in the fourteenth century. Germain and Günther are good on single points. Henderson reproduces the foundation charter of Heidelberg, and Munro is a valuable short collection of sources relating to instruction, privileges, and student life. Sheldon contains a good chapter on student life. Lagrange relates chiefly to the pranks of the medical students. Steele is a valuable reprint of an encyclopedia of Bartholomew Angleus [13th C.], and is an exposition of the best that was taught in medicine and science.

The General Works in group 4 contain chapters so short as to be of but minor value. Emerton is a fair general outline of the main facts; Green has a few good pages on the stand of Oxford against Church feudalism; Newman deals with medieval Oxford and the relation of the colleges to the university; and Noble is a general outline of German university history.

For group 5, Barnard will be found most useful of the special reference, though Rashdall is a better reference for the Italian universities than any one of the group. Sandys has a few pages which are good on the early specialization at Bologna. Reyner takes Salamanca at the close of the sixteenth century as a type.

The few references in group 5 on the University of Paris have been selected from the many works on the subject, but they will be of value only to the special student. The English reading student will find Rashdall best for his purposes, and after that Companys. *Binkis is a good work, and well written by a man who has the cons of four quarto volumes of sources in the original Latin. Fournier consists of four volumes of sources on the history of the French universities during the Middle Ages. Two-thirds of *Jourdain is a historical sketch and the remainder is illustrative documents, while Tjouardain is a chronological index to the historical documents from 1200 to 1600, with an analysis (in Latin). Luclaire is a short sketch based on such as the ties as Denizot. Rashdall and Thurot. Pétrene is a scholarly research on the students, masters, and instruction in law. Thurot gives a good description of the educational work in the developed university, but is of minor value on the origin of the university.

The Authorities in group 7 are good and contain many illustrative historical documents, but are so highly specialized as to be of little value except to the special investigator who can read French.

Of the references in group 8, relating to the University of Oxford, Lyte is the standard work, being the first critical history of the University. Brodick is a good condensed history, especially valuable on the period after the Middle Ages. Parker is a monument to antiquarian research. Clark's history of the colleges is a particularly valuable piece of research, and is very readable. These works are all long, and the general student will probably find the section on Oxford in Rashdall better suited to his needs. The publications of the Oxford Historical Society are of first importance, though highly specialized and detailed. The popular college histories by Robinson will be useful for detailed information, though Clark contains in more condensed form almost everything that will be desired. Of the shorter and more popular sketches, Boase and Corbin are to be commended. Corbin is a delightful short sketch of Oxford history and life. Hulton is a popular sketch of thirteenth to eighteenth century life at Oxford. Hoyt is based on secondary authorities, but appears to have been carefully written. Barnard is long, has been superseded in part by more recent works, and is not to be preferred as a reference. Montmorency sketches university conditions from the fourteenth to the seventeenth centuries. Stedman contains little of historical value.

Of the Authorities in group 9 relating to the University of Cambridge, Müller is readable and valuable history. It is in addition to being a good history of Cambridge it is a real contribution to the history of medieval culture and learning. Müller is a popular abridgment, bringing the history down to the present time. Clark is a popular history of the University and sketch of the colleges, and would serve as a good guide book at Cambridge. Clark is a monument to scholarly investigation, and the chapters cited on the early history of the University and on the history of the libraries, though minute in detail, are very readable. Cooper is the most detailed history of the University that has yet appeared, and contains translations of many important documents. Cooper relates largely to the colleges, and is not so important. Jessopp is a good review of TClark, reprinted from the Nineteenth Century. Dyer contains the statutes to the time of Elizabeth. The popular college histories by Robinson will probably be of less value to the student than Clark. Bail is a good history of mathematical study at Cambridge. The two works by Wordsworth contain much valuable information on the studies and life at the English universities in the eighteenth century, but with particular reference to Cambridge.

The few Authorities in group 11, on the German universities, have been selected from a large list. Of these Paulsen is a standard work and will be the most useful. Paulsen, another standard work, also contains good chapters. Kaufmann is the first systematic history of the German universities and is good, though so long as to be of use only to the special student. Koch is a collection of orders, laws and decrees, historically arranged. Zarncke is a collection of old Latin manuals and lectures. Raumer's history, translated in Barnard, is still of value.

The general student, beginning the subject, probably will do best to confine his attention to Rashdall, Companyé, or Laurie. Rashdall is particularly good on origins, while Companyé is very good on organization, instruction and influence. By following the citations of the pages of the Syllabus and the suggestions given above, information on special points may be obtained.

It is readable and valuable, though very long, and in addition to being a good history of Cambridge it is a real contribution to the history of medieval culture and learning. Mullinger is a popular abridgment, bringing the history down to the present time. *Clark is a popular history of the University and sketch of the colleges, and would serve as a good guide book at Cambridge. *Clark is a monument to scholarly investigation, and the chapters cited on the early history of the University and on the history of the libraries, though minute in details, are very readable. *Cooper is the most detailed history of the University that has yet appeared, and contains translations of many important documents. *Cooper relates largely to the colleges, and is not so important. Jessopp is a good review of *Clark. *Cooper is the most detailed history of the University that has yet appeared, and contains translations of many important documents. *Cooper relates largely to the colleges, and is not so important. Jessopp is a good review of *Clark. Dyer contains the statutes to the time of Elizabeth. The popular college histories by Robinson will probably be of less value to the student than *Clark. Ball is a good history of mathematical study at Cambridge. The two works by Wordsworth contain much valuable information on the studies and life at the English universities in the eighteenth century, but with particular reference to Cambridge.

The few Authorities in group 11, on the German universities, have been selected from a large list. Of these *Paulsen is a standard work and will be the most useful. *Paulsen, another standard work, also contains good chapters. Kaufmann is the first systematic history of the German universities and is good, though so long as to be of use only to the special student. Koch is a collection of orders, laws and decrees, historically arranged. Zurnecke is a collection of old Latin manuals and lectures. Raumer's history, translated in Barnard, is still of value.

The general student, beginning the subject, probably will do best to confine his attention to Rashdall, Companpré, or Laurie. Rashdall is particularly good on origins, while Companpré is very good on organization, instruction and influence. By following the citations of the pages of the Syllabus and the suggestions given above, information on special points may be obtained.

C IN ENGLAND.

(Drane, II, ch. xi; Palgrave; Schmid, II, Pt. 2, 135–138.)

I INTRODUCTION INTO ENGLAND. (Broderick, 70–74; Creighton; Field, 57–63; Gasquet, ch. ii; †Hazlitt, IV, sec. 36; Lyte, 381–395; *Mullinger, I, 477–487; †Mullinger, ch. iv; Traill, II, 504–507.)

1 Between 1450 and 1500 several Oxford students studied in Italy.
   a Work of the pioneers. (Burrows, ch. v; Einstein, ch. i; Morley, VII, 20–40; Palgrave.)
      1) Linacre [c. 1487].
      2) Grocyn [1491].
      3) John Colet, an Oxford M.A., spent the years 1493–1496 in Italy. (†Seebohm, 14–23.)
         a) Came under the influence of Savonarola.
            1) The result.
         b) His lectures on St. Paul’s Epistles [1496–1497].
            Lupton, chs. v, vi.)

2 Colet joined in the work of reform by Erasmus and More. The three labored for free thought, tolerance, education, and a reformed religion. (Barnard’s Jr., XVI, 657–666; Field, 57–63; Gasquet, ch. ix; Green, 314–320; Lyte, 391–395; *Seebohm, 76–96; †Seebohm; Watson, 1902, 503–508.)
   a More’s Utopia illustrative of advanced thought on political and social questions.
   b More’s Letters on the Education of Children illustrative of advanced educational thought. (Barnard’s Jr., XXIII, 369–376.)
   c The Statutes of Corpus Christi College, Oxford [1517], as evidence of the hold the New Learning had secured at the University. (Lyte, 407–414; *Mullinger, I, 521–523; Palgrave, 824–825.)

3 Sir Thomas Elyot’s Gouvernour [1531] as expressive of the full force of the Renaissance. (Barnard’s Jr., XVI, 483–496; Croft; †Laurie, ch. v; Watson, 1901, 874–880.)

II JOHN COLET [1466–1519]. (Adams, 381–382; Barnard’s Jr., XVI, 657–666; Green, 304–313; Lupton, chs. iv–vi; Palgrave, 822–824; *Seebohm, 78–88.)

1 Inaugurated religious and political reforms and prepared the way for the Reformation. (Syllabus, sect. XXIII.)
2 Started a movement in favor of better schools. (Syllabus, sect. XXIX.)
3 Crushed Scholasticism and reformed the universities.
4 Movement checked by religious wars following the Reformation.
5 The productive period in English literature which followed the coming of peace and prosperity.

D THE REVIVAL OF LEARNING AS INFLUENCED BY:

I THE INVENTION OF PRINTING. (*Beard, 53–54; Blades, ch. iv;
   *Cajori, 138–139; †Cajori, 21–27; Draper, II, 198–205; Duff, chs.
   i, ii; Duruy, ch. xxxiii; *Hallam, I, ch. iii; Lacroix, 471–520; Putnam, I, 348–402; Schaff, 109–114; Stillé, ch. xvi; †Symonds, 127–131, 368–391; Traill, 527–529.)
1 Linen paper began to be made from rags about the beginning of the fourteenth century. (*Hallam, I, ch. 1, 55–60; Lacroix, 413– 422.)
2 Dates connected with the invention of printing.
   1423 Coster of Harlem made the first engraved page.
   1438 Gutenberg of Mentz invented movable types.
   1450 Schoeffer and Faust cast first metal type.
   1455 Bible printed by Gutenberg and Faust at Mentz. First complete book printed.
   1462 Mentz pillaged by Adolph of Nassau and its printers scattered over Europe.
3 Spread of printing in Germany. (Duff, ch. iii; Janssen, I, 9–24.)
4 Introduction of printing into Italy.—Sabine Mountains [1465]; Florence [1471]. Venice became the center of the book trade.
   1) Great work of the Aldine press. (*Barnard, 42–44;
      Draper, II, 199–200; Oliphant, 393–410; Putnam, I, 401– 439; †Symonds, 368–391; Traill, II, 529–530.)
5 Introduction of printing into other countries:—France [1469]; Switzerland [1470]; Holland and Belgium [1473]; Spain [1474]; England [between 1474 and 1477]. (Duff, chs. iii–v.)

a Work of Caxton in England. (Blades, chs. v–vii; Duff, ch. viii; Green, 295–298; Morley, VI, ch. xiv; Putnam, II, 101–133; Traill, II, 531–537; Whittemore.)

6 Effects of the invention of printing upon education. (Draper, II, 200–204.)

6 Suggestions as to Reading.

Of the Authorities relating to the Revival in Italy, Burchhardt, Owen, Schaff, and the two works by Symonds give detailed accounts of the Italian movement as a whole. Burchhardt is an old German authority, written in a very careful manner, but lacking the charm of style which characterizes the works of Symonds. Owen deals with the period of preparation and the place of Dante, Petrarch, and Boccaccio. Schaff contains a good account. †Symonds is a classic work, though long. Scaife contains one good general chapter on the intellectual life of the period. Robinson & Rolfe is an excellent work, being chiefly a translation of the letters of Petrarch, with elucidations. Woodward is a very valuable collection of the educational writings of the early Italian humanists, with a good life of da Feltre and a good summary. Whitcomb reproduces the treatise of Aeneas Sylvius; Thurber is an excellent summary of the work of da Feltre; Allen has a good chapter on the pagan revival; †Laurie is a good work, containing good short articles; and Liscomb is a very readable account of the preservation and recovery of the old authors.

Of the Authorities in group 2a, Barnard reproduces a number of good chapters from von Raumer on the early teachers and humanists. These are also to be found in *Barnard. †Beard contains an excellent chapter on the Renaissance in Germany and its effect. †Beard is also very good on the revival in Italy and Germany. Hamlyn contains a good chapter on the Renaissance and the universities of Germany. Iham contains a short life, and a reproduction of some of Agricola's writings. Janssen, a standard German Catholic work, contains a brilliant picture of the work of the Brethren of the Common Life and the centers of learning on the introduction of the New Learning. The two citations to Laurie are well worth reading. Kaemmel is a strongly anti-Catholic work, which covers the German period at some length. *Paulsen is a standard work, and contains a good chapter on the time of the German humanists, their ideals and their reforms. †Whitecomb contains selections from, and ‡Whitcomb reproduces entire an Autobiography which is a valuable commentary on fifteenth century school life.

Of the works relating to Erasmus, in group 2b, Drummond is a valuable life, and contains many interesting sketches of the state of education during the childhood and life of Erasmus. Erasmus' *Praise of Folly, with Holbein's illustrations, is a useful translation. Emerton is a very good popular life, though having little reference to Erasmus' educational work. †Jebb is a valuable and very readable lecture. Froude's *Life and Letters is a book possessing great charm, and is of much value. Norcross is a good general sketch. Becher is a recent Doctor's Dissertation; Compayré is so short as to be of but minor value; and Israel and Reichling are reprints of Erasmus' writings on the education of children. Watson contains some good notes.

Of the General Works, under group 2c, Francke, Painter, Scherer, and Williams contain short general chapters of value to the general student. Plath is of value only for practice in reading German. The others refer to particular points, indicated in the pages of the Syllabus.

Of the Authorities in group 3, on the Revival in England, Creighton is one of the best short general sketches. Gasquet and †Hazlitt also contain good general sketches. *Hazlitt has a good but short chapter on Erasmus, Colet, and St. Paul's School. Lupton is the standard life of Colet, and contains much material of particular value to the student of educational history. †Seebom is another very valuable work. Burrows has a good chapter on Grocyn, and Morley has a chapter on Linacre, Grocyn, and the introduction of the new humanism into England. Palgrave is a review of Lyte. Lyte contains but a few pages bearing on the subject, though these are good. The two works by Mullinger are standard histories, and are cited for their descriptions of the Renaissance at Cambridge. Barnard's articles are quite valuable. Broderick is so brief as to be unsatisfactory. Croft is a valuable reprint. The notes by Watson are of much value, as they represent much patient searching of old books.

The references in group 4 all refer to particular points, as indicated in the pages of the Syllabus. Duff is a good account of the invention and spread of printing. Morley relates to the work of Caxton, and Oliphant to the work of the Aldines. Keane is a readable and a valuable short history of geographical discovery, and contains excellent reproductions of medieval maps. Putnam is a standard history of bookmaking.

Of the references in group 5, which are general on the whole movement, Field is one of the best. Fischer, †Jebb, †Laurie, and Moeller contain good general outlines. Adams contains an excellent chapter. May contains a good summary of the causes of the Renaissance. The *Enc. Brit. article is a good summary of the literary aspect of the movement. Draper contains a good short sketch of certain phases. Schmid contains a detailed sketch by countries, with good bibliographies.

Of the General Works, in group 5b, †Fisher, Kemp, Schiller, *Seebom, and Williams probably contain the most satisfactory chapters. Stillé is good on the influences.

The general student, beginning the study, and desiring a brief outline of the movement, would do well to read Adams, †Laurie, *Jebb for Erasmus, Creighton, †Jebb, and the citations in Field, and then supplement by such other short references as may be needed to fill out the outline. The pages of the Syllabus should be consulted for more detailed suggestions as to reading.

4 Suggestions as to Reading.

The Sources are all valuable, though chiefly in German. Barnard contains only portions of Platter. The two works by Freundgen also contain historical and biographical sketches. Holdway has a good introduction on German schools during the Middle Ages, and is a very valuable source in itself. Israel is a valuable collection of laws and decrees. Whitcomb is a valuable translation of an old autobiography which describes fifteenth century school life.

The Important Secondary Authorities, in group 2, contain many valuable chapters. Allen is an interesting description of school life in a Brussels school. Allain has a good chapter on French schools in the Middle Ages, which is reviewed by Azarias. The articles in Barnard's Jr. are all good. Beaurepaire is a good special research. Capes and Montmorency contains excellent chapters on the schools in existence in England. Furnivall's introduction is a detailed account of education in England, with many extracts from sources. Gasquet, a very fair and liberal Catholic author, describes education in England and the Canterbury cloister school at the time of the Reformation. Hazlitt contains a number of short but interesting chapters on books and studies during the later Middle Ages. Janssen is a translation of a standard German Catholic work, and contains a brilliant picture of the educational conditions in Germany at the time of the Reformation. Leach is a valuable and very readable study on English schools. Lorenz is good on all classes of schools for Germany, and contains many citations to authorities. Ravelet outlines the nature and extent of education in France, and also gives many citations to authorities. Just has five articles on schools, largely from the child's point of view. Kasmel, Specht, and Schmid contain detailed sketches of German schools of the pre-Reformation period. Lacroix has an interesting chapter on the scholars, instruction, and education of the higher schools of the Middle Ages, but is generally silent on elementary instruction. Grant has a good chapter on Scottish burgh schools, and Schaff contains a good general article.

Of the General Works in group 3, Scisfe contains two pages on the schools of Florence; Adams, Browne, Edgar, Green, Traill, and Wright contain short chapters on various periods of English education; and Dittes, Plath, Regener, Russell, and Schwickerath refer to Germany. The citations are short, though usually good. The English references will be found most valuable. Painter and Schwickerath are more general. Cutts contains a short chapter on the parish priest of the Middle Ages and his work.

The general student will probably find the citations in Azarias, Capes, Furnivall, Grant or Edgar, Hazlitt, Leach, and Ravelet most valuable for a general view of the educational conditions before the Reformation. These may be supplemented by other short citations, as indicated in the pages of the Syllabus, to complete the outline.

Five Suggestions as to Reading.
The Sources contain good illustrative material, the one by Robinson & Whitcomb being especially valuable.

Of the Secondary Authorities of first importance in group 2, the two works by Beard are of particular value. The chapters are excellent, though long. They give the spirit of the Reformation movement rather than the mere historical facts. Köstlin in a translation and condensation of a two-volume German work, which, at its publication, placed all preceding lives of Luther in the class of antiquated literature in point of historical accuracy and thoroughness. Schaff is a detailed volume on the period of the Reformation. It contains a mass of valuable information, but Fisher, or Kurtz, or Moeller may be found more useful because of greater condensation. Francke contains a very good and a very readable account of the work of Luther and the Reformation movement. Schmid is a detailed account. Of the shorter articles, the general chapter in Adams and the chapter in Trench on the Eve of the Reformation are to be commended, and the general student will do well to read these.

Of the Secondary Authorities in group 3, Allen contains good general chapters on the Reformation as a whole, and the pages cited in Fisher give a short, good, and clear statement. Jacobs is a good popular life of Luther. Mullinger and Perry are cited only for their reference to the suppression of the monasteries in England. Ward deals with the Counter Reformation. Watson has a chapter on the Reformation in France, which is a good condensed account. Hauser is a good condensed history, particularly valuable to the mature advanced student. It is a translation of a standard German work, and is a conservative Protestant account by a careful historical writer.

Of the General Works in group 4, Draper, Henderson, and Painter contain the most useful chapters. Part of Draper, and Hughes, Johnson, and Wakeman relate to the Counter Reformation. The first two represent opposite points of view, while the latter two give good brief political accounts. Drane relates to the Reformation in England. Dittes and Plath contain but a few pages each, and are useful chiefly for practice in reading easy German.

The general student, desiring a general view of the Reformation movement as a background for the educational work of the period, will probably find the chapters in Adams or Trench, Fisher, or selections from the chapters in the two works by Beard, particularly suitable for his needs. Henderson and Watson contain good condensed sketches of the Reformation in Germany and France respectively. The Counter Reformation may be left to be studied under section XXV of the Syllabus.
XXIV THE REFORMATION AND EDUCATION IN GERMANY.

(Barnard’s Jr., VIII, 348–360; Davidson, 175–189; †Fischer, 51–62; Heppe, 43–60; Kämmer; Kemp, chs. xv, xvi; *Laurie; Plath, §10.)

I THE PROTESTANTS AND PUBLIC EDUCATION. (Ellis; *Painter, 135–147; †Paulsen, I, 173–196; Ziegler, 61–63.)

1 Authority of the Church now superseded by the authority of the Bible.

2 Necessity of making the new training as effective as the old had been.

a Luther’s work to accomplish this.

1) His sermons, Catechisms, Bible, etc. (Meyer and Phrizhom, 117–194; Plath, 82–86.)

3 Need of a union of family, Church, and State.

a State education a necessary sequence.

II LUTHER’S CIRCULAR LETTERS ON EDUCATION. (Compayré, 114–118; †Paulsen, I, 196–203.)

1 Letter to the Mayors and Aldermen of all the Cities of Germany in behalf of Christian Schools [1524].

a The Letter in full. (*Barnard, 139–150; Barnard’s Jr., IV, 429–440; Israel, pt. 1; Meyer and Prinzhom, 91–116; †Painter, 169–209; Plath, 75–82; Wagner.)

1) Condition of schools throughout Germany.

2) Duty of Christians.

3) Neglect and ignorance of parents.

4) Schools and private tutoring.

5) The duty of mayors and aldermen.

6) Classical studies and the Scriptures.

7) “The welfare of the State depends upon the intelligence and virtue of its citizens.”

8) Training the schools had given and should give.

9) Libraries.

2 Sermon on the Duty of Sending Children to School [1530]. (Barnard’s Jr., IV, 440–442; Russell, 28–32.)

a The sermon in full. (Israel, pt. 5; Meyer and Prinzhom, 155–194; †Painter, 210–271; Wagner.)

1) Purpose of the sermon.

2) Duty of ministers.
3) Spiritual benefit arising from the support of schools.
4) Duty of all citizens.
5) Need of educated men.
6) Temporal benefits to be derived from schools.
7) Needs of the civil service and the professions.
8) The teacher and the minister.
9) Duty of parents.

VI THE WORK OF TWO OF MELANCTHON’S PUPILS. (Plath, §12; Regener, 81–83; Williams, 101–106.)

1 Valentine Trotzendorf [1490–1556]. (*Barnard, 185–191; Barnard’s Jr., V, 107–113; †Laurie, ch. iii; Plath, 92–100; Schmid, II, Pt. 2, 277–302.)
   a His school at Goldberg; its curriculum; and his work there. (Plath, 100–103.)
   b His plan of pupil government.

2 Michael Neander [1525–1595]. (*Barnard, 225–228; Barnard’s Jr., V, 599–602; †Laurie, ch. iii; Schmid, II, Pt. 2, 388–430.)
   a His school at Ilfeld am Harz. [Rector, 1550–1595.]
   b His curriculum. Points of emphasis in his school.

VII THE WORK OF JOHANN STURM (STURMIUS) [1507–1589]. (*Barnard, 209–223; Barnard’s Jr., IV, 401–415; Fournier, IV, pt. 1; Laas; †Laurie, ch. iii; *Painter, 159–164; Parker; Paulsen, I, 282–290; Quick, 27–32; Russell, 42–44; Schiller, 111–120; Schmid, II, Pt. 2, 302–388; Williams, 96–101; Ziegler, 74–93, 129–133.)

1 Early life and education.
   2 Rector of the Gymnasion at Strassburg [1537–1582].
      a This soon became the most famous school of Europe.
   3 His Plan [1538]; Classical Letters [1565]; Examination [1578].
   4 His Gymnasion. (Keatinge, 126–129.)
      a The system of classes.
         1) Age of entrance.
         2) Work of the grades.
      b His course of study in full, by grades. (*Barnard, 195–208; Barnard’s Jr., IV, 167–182; *Painter, 160–162.)
   5 The Gymnasion to be followed by a five-year college course.
      a Aim of the latter.
   6 Reasons for Sturm’s great success as a schoolmaster.
   7 Defects of his Plan.
      a Change from the ideals of Luther.
   *8 Influence of his work on the later development of education.

VIII THE CHANGE TO SCHOLASTIC HUMANISM. (*Barnard, 267–272, 413–416; Barnard’s Jr., V, 657–662; Dittes, 127–133; Noble, 26–39; Paulsen, I, 453–460; Quick, 22–26; Russell, 43–58; Ziegler, 129–133.)
1 Education as advocated by Erasmus and Luther.
2 The change under Melancthon's influence.
3 The further change under the influence of Sturmius and his followers.
4 The combined effect of this change, of the subsequent theological disputes, and of the devastation caused by the Thirty Years' War [1618-1648]. (Schmid, IV, Pt. 1, i-186.)
   a In destroying the desire for popular education.
   b In alienating the nobility and men of the world, resulting in the establishment of schools of a new type.
5 Status of German schools in the seventeenth century. (*Barnard, 416-426; Barnard's Jr., VII, 367-380; Dittes, 169-177; *Fischer, I, chs. vi-vii; Nohle, 44-45; Regener, 86-91, 115-119; Schmid, V, Pt. 3, 60-77; Vostrovsky.)

IX THE RITTERAKADEMIEEN OF THE 17th CENTURY. (Nohle, 41-42; *Paulsen, I, 453-460, 501-511; †Paulsen, 598-608; Russell, 50-58; Schiller, 197-201; Ziegler, 167-171.)
1 Overpowering influence of the splendor of the French court on:— a The language.
   b The manners and customs.
   c The habits of thought of the German people.
2 The new educational ideal, or rather an old ideal in a new form.
3 The nature of the new schools.
   a Studies.
   b Attitude toward the new scientific subjects.

5 Suggestions as to Reading.

The Sources are particularly valuable, those in German containing reproductions of many important ordinances, addresses, regulations, etc., the ones edited by Diehl, Israel, Koldeway, Richter, and Wattendorf being particularly valuable to the special investigator. The many sources reproduced in English by Barnard will be of much value to the student. Fournier relates to the gymnasium and academy at Strassburg. Vostrotsky reproduces a course of study used at Prague in 1609.

Of the Important Secondary Authorities in German, in Group 2, Dittes, Paulsen, Plath, Regener, Schiller, Schmid, and Ziegler contain good general chapters on the whole period and on the work of the different leaders, Schmid being a very detailed account. Fischer is a standard and very valuable work, volume I describing the history of the Volkschule in detail from the time of the Reformation to 1790. Heinemann and Runge are recent historical sketches of individual town schools. Laas is a valuable short historical and critical work on John Sturm. Meyer & Prinzthom is a valuable history of the life and work of Luther. Heppe is a good short sketch of schools before and after the Reformation. Wagner is a general work, of about the same character as †Painter.

Of the Important Secondary Authorities in English, †Painter will be the most useful single work, partly because of the translations of sources contained. The articles in Barnard's Jr., are also very useful. †Laurie contains good short chapters on Sturm, Trotzendorf, and Neander. Richards is a good popular life of Melanthon, but will be less useful for his educational work than the articles in Barnard. Russell contains a number of short citations which are good. Davidson contains a short general chapter which presents a general view, but is lacking in detail.

Of the Short Articles of Minor Importance, in group 4, Noble, *Painter, and Williams are the most valuable. The citations in Ellis, Keatinge, and Quick refer to single points and are good, though quite brief. Fischer is a good short outline, in easy German. Compaires contains a brief outline of the educational work of Luther.

The general student, beginning the study, will probably do best to read the sources cited in Barnard and †Painter, and the citations in *Painter, Russell, and †Laurie. For more detailed suggestions as to reading see the citations in the pages of the Syllabus.
XXV THE COUNTER REFORMATION: JESUIT EDUCATION.

(Barnard’s Jr., V, 213–228, VI, 615–622, XIV, 455–482; Browning, 118–127; Compayré, 138–150; Draper, II, 214–228; Kemp, ch. xviii; Kurtz, II, 426–434; Laurie, ch. viii; Munroe, 124–135; Payne, 45–51; Quick, ch. iv; Regner, 83–86; Russell, 66–62; Schiller, 124–134; Wishart, ch. vi; Ziegler, 109–121.)

5 Suggestions as to Reading.

Of the Sources, Duhr and Pachler are very valuable works. Duhr contains a history of the Ratio, a statement of the principles upon which it is based, the plan of organization of the schools of the Society, and the Ratio of 1599, with the revisions of 1832 included. Pachler is the great work on the history of the Society. The first volume covers the history of the Society to 1599, with an introduction, bibliography, and documents. Volume two contains the preliminary Ratio of 1586 in Latin, and the final Ratio of 1599, with the revisions of 1832, in parallel columns, and both in parallel pages, one being in Latin and the other in German. Volume three carries the history of the Order down to 1772, and volume four to 1832 and includes the 1832 Ratio.

Of the Authorities in group 2, on the organization and work of the Order, Fischer, Fisher, Hassall, Ward, and Wishart can probably be depended on for a fair account, though almost any one of the references of the group would be objected to by one strongly prejudiced either for or against the Society. Cartwright is very good on the organization of the Order, though containing little on education. Draper contains a strong description of the work of the Jesuits, written from an anti-Jesuit point of view. Fischer and Fisher contain good clear accounts. Greisinger is a translation of a popular and strongly anti-Jesuit work. Hassall has a good chapter on the causes of the suppression of the Jesuits. Stephen sketches the early work of Loyola, Xavier, and Laynez. Wishart contains a good short account of the work of the Order. The most sympathetic account will be found in Hughes or Schwickerath, under 3, below.

Of the Important Secondary Authorities of group 3, having reference to the educational work of the Order, Hughes or Schwickerath contain good historical accounts, written from a Jesuit point of view. Hughes is a fair and a well written history of the educational work of the Society. Schwickerath contains a description of the Jesuit system of education of the present as well as an historical account. Seeley and other writers have merely caricatured the Jesuits. Magevney is a short, popular, and somewhat partisan sketch. Mertz is an excellent popular sketch, based largely on Duhr and Pachler. Barnard contains a good short historical sketch. Lantoine is good on Jesuit higher instruction in France, but highly specialized and of value only to the special student. Munroe, Paulsen, and Quick contain good general chapters. The student who does not have time to read Hughes or Schwickerath will probably find Munroe and Quick the most useful of all the list of references. Laurie contains a short chapter on certain aspects of Jesuit education.

Of the Minor Works in group 4, Browning, Compayré, Kemp, and Russell contain short general chapters which are good for a first outline, but lacking in details and of less value even to the general student than the chapters in Munroe and Quick. Kurtz relates to the Counter-Reformation aspect; Mullinger to the founding of Jesuit colleges at the universities, with the injurious result; and Regener and Schiller contain short general articles of minor value, Schiller being much the better of the two.

The general student, beginning the study, will probably obtain the best idea of the educational system of the Jesuits by reading the citations in Hughes or Schwickerath, or the chapters in Munroe and Quick. Fisher or Wishart will give a good short account of the rise and spread of the Order.
XXVI THREE EARLY FRENCH REALISTS.

A Pierre Ramus [1515–1572].

I LIFE AND EDUCATIONAL IDEAS.
1 Birth and life.
2 His text-books.
3 His attacks on the Scholastic and Aristotelian philosophy.
   a Broader-minded view of his Spanish contemporary, Vivès [1492–1540], as to the value of Aristotle's philosophy. (Kayser, 129–166; Kuyper; Schiller, 120–124; Ziegler, 104–109.)
1) Vivès' educational ideas. (Barnard's Jr., XXVII, 339–351; Kayser, 166–179; Monroe, 16–22; Watson, 483–486; Williams, 65–68.)
2) Vivès De Disciplinis [1531]. (Barnard's Jr., XXVII, 343–347.)
4 Ramus' views as to the use of the vernacular.
5 Reform of the University of Paris.
6 A victim of the intolerance of his time.

3 Suggestions as to Reading.

For Ramus, Waddington contains a full and scholarly account. Wurkert, a recent Doctor's dissertation, is an analysis of Ramus' work. The English reading student will find the article in Barnard best suited to his needs. Owen also contains a good chapter on Ramus. Mullinger and Williams, the latter based largely on Barnard, are also good.

For Vivès, Kayser is a standard work, and contains a sketch of his life and a reproduction of three treatises and two study plans. Barnard contains a good sketch, and the few pages cited in Monroe and Schiller are also useful.

B FRANÇOIS RABELAIS [1483–1553].

(Browning, 68–79; Compayré, 91–100; Conway; Faget, 77–126; Quick, ch. v; Schmid, III, Pt. 1, 190–202; Stapf; Van Laun, I, 281–295.)

I THE MAN AND HIS WORK. (†Besant; Fleury, I, ch. 1; Munroe, ch. ii.)

1 Birth and early life.
2 His Life of Gargantua [1535], and The Heroic Deeds of Pantagruel [1533].
   a First to reach the masses in matters relating to education.
   b His books a good portrayal of the Renaissance and the Middle Ages in conflict.
   c Effect of his protest against Medievalism.
   d Why he wrote as a clown and a fool.

II HIS WRITINGS. (Barnard's Jr., XIV, 147–158; *Besant; Munroe, ch. ii.)

1 The chapters of educational importance.
   a Life of Gargantua:—(Chs. 13, 14, 15, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24.)
   b Deeds of Pantagruel:—(Chs. 5, 6, 7, 8.)
2 The story of the books. (Browning, 68–79; Compayré, 92–100; Gebhart, 218–241; Morley; Munroe, 95–101; Street.)
   a His ridicule of the old Scholastic learning.
   b Outline of his views on education.
      1) Physical education.
      2) Greek; Latin; Hebrew.
      3) Physical and Natural Sciences.
      4) Religious and moral education.
      5) Reform in methods.
   c Gargantua's letter to Pantagruel. (Deeds of Pantagruel, ch. 8.)

STAPFER, P. Rabelais; sa personne, son génie, son œuvre. [Paris, 1889.]

VAN LAUN, HENRI. History of French Literature, I. [New York, 1876.]

Suggestions as to Reading.
For Rabelais, Arnstaedt, Faguet, Fleury, Gehhart and Stapfer are all very helpful, though all are in French. Arnstaedt is a careful study, and traces Rabelais' influence down to Rousseau; Gehhart is good on Rabelais' theory of education; and Fleury is good on Rabelais and his century. Of the English works, †Besant is a short and good biographical and critical sketch; Street contains a good essay; Van Laun has a good general chapter; and the chapters in Laurie, Munroe, and Quick are well worth reading. The student should read some of the chapters in Rabelais which are cited in the Syllabus, and then follow this by some of the critical essays on Rabelais, his times, and his ideas.

C MICHEL EYQUEM DE MONTAIGNE [1533-1592].

I HIS LIFE. (Bonnefon; Hazlitt, I, pp. xvii-xlii; Lowndes, 16-45; Rector, 1-6.)
1 Birth and early life.
a Training received from his father.
b His experiences at the College of Guienne.
2 His extensive learning.
3 Became a lawyer, and was elected Mayor of Bordeaux.
4 Retired to live on his estate in 1572.
   a His tower room. (Essays, bk. III, ch. iii.)
5 His Essays [1589–1595]. Two of special educational importance.
   a On Pedantry. (Essays, bk. I, ch. xxiv; Rector, 19–85.)
   b On the Education of Children. (Essays, bk. I, ch. xxy; Rector, 85–109.)

II MONTAIGNE’S IDEAS ON EDUCATION. (*Barnard, 317–334; Barnard’s Jr., IV, 461–478; †Laurie, ch. ix; Lowndes, 37–45: Munroe, 95–101; Quick, ch. vi.)
1 The Essay on the Education of Children.
   a Value of mere knowledge.
   b What constitutes true knowledge.
   c The ancient classics vs. training in judgment and virtue.
   d Things before words; realism in education.
   e Value of a study of things in preparing political and intellectual freedom.
2 Broke completely with the Renaissance.
3 Effect on his own age.
4 Influence on Locke and Rousseau. (Rector, 13–18.)
5 Value of his Essay for the teacher of to-day.

Suggestions as to Reading.
For Montaigne, Bonnefon is a standard French biography, and Lowndes is a standard English work, but the student will find Collins more useful than either because of its condensation. The important reading for the student is Montaigne's Essay on the Education of Children, and such references as those by Laurie, Munroe, and Quick, all of which are good, will contain about all the additional information that the general student will need. Hazlitt contains a very good biographical introduction. Faguet and Owen contain good general chapters, though long. Browning and Compayré will be serviceable as an introduction or supplement to the Essay.
XXVII THEORY AND PRACTICE IN FRANCE IN THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY.

A THE JANSENISTS.

(Allen, lect. v; Barnard's Jr., XXVIII. 1-16; Browning, 127-134; Buisson, Pt. 1, Tome II, 2409-2417; Compaire, 153-163, 215-217; Fischer, 153-157; Munroe, 135-147; Painter, 224-227; Sainte-Beuve; Schmid, IV, Pt. 1; Stephen, I, essay vi; Ziegler, 179-182.)

I HISTORY OF THE SOCIETY. (Beard, I; Bowen; Cadet; Carré, pp. v-xv, 1-30; Quick, ch. xi.)

1 Founded by Saint Cyran.
2 The "Little Schools" first established at Port Royal in 1643.
3 Small number of pupils and teachers.
4 The Order a reaction against the work and the methods of the Jesuits.
5 Persecution.
6 Suppression of the Order [1660].

a The members fled to the Netherlands and began the writing of those books which have so greatly influenced educational thought.

II SOME OF THE FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES OF THE SOCIETY.

1 "You ought to consider your children as wholly inclined to evil and carried forwards toward it. All their inclinations are corrupt, and, not being governed by reason, they will permit them to find pleasure and diversions only in the things that carry them toward vice."—Varet.
2 "The devil already possesses the soul of the unborn child."—Saint Cyran.
3 "Education is in a sense, the one thing necessary. I wish you might read in my heart the affection I feel for children. You could not deserve more of God than in working for the proper bringing up of children."—Saint Cyran.
4 "The purpose of instruction is to carry forward intelligences to the farthest point that they are capable of attaining."—Nichole.
5 "The intelligence of children always being dependent on the senses, we must, as far as possible, address our instruction to the senses, and cause it to reach the mind, not only through hearing, but also through seeing."—Nichole.

III NATURE OF THEIR INSTRUCTION. (Beard, II, ch. ii; Bowen; Buisson; Cadet; Carré, pp. xv–xxxvi; Munroe, 135–147; Quick, ch. xi.)

1 Classes; conversation; out-of-door lessons.
2 Discipline; demeanor of pupils.
3 Scope of personal influence.
4 Affection for children.
5 Reason vs. memory in training.
6 The education of girls.

IV PEDAGOGICAL PRINCIPLES; ADVANCES IN METHOD. (Beard, II, ch. ii; Bowen; Cadet; Carré; Munroe, 135–147; Quick, ch. xi.)

1 Emulation.
2 Memory.
3 Interest.
4 Equal education of the sexes.
5 Emphasis placed on the modern languages.
   a Instruction in the mother tongue.
   b The study of Latin.
   c Treatises on the study of Spanish and Italian.
6 Greek taught directly from the French and not through the medium of Latin.
   a This declared to be impious by the Jesuits.
7 Reform in methods of teaching Latin.
8 Introduced phonics into the teaching of reading.

V RESULTS AND IMPORTANCE OF THEIR WORK. (Cadet; Munroe, 135–147; Quick, ch. xi.)

1 Their educational experiment the best in France before the middle of the nineteenth century.
2 Their work in the nature of a protest.
3 The slow but gradual acceptance of many of their ideas.

Suggestions as to Reading.

Of the references on the Jansenists and their schools, Beard, Cadet, Carré, and Sainte-Beuve are the larger and more important works. Beard is a valuable contribution to the history of religion and learning in France. The second volume contains a sixty-page chapter on the schools of the Order. Sainte-Beuve is the great work on the subject. Cadet is a collection of extracts from the educational writings of the members, and contains an introduction which the general student will find very useful. Of the shorter articles, the chapters in Munroe and Quick are very good and ought to be included by the general student in his reading. Barnard and Comptre also contain good chapters. Bowen is a good brief outline. Schmid is good, but quite long and detailed. Stephen bears on the life and thought of the Society but contains little on education. The other references contain only short and somewhat general articles.

B Abbé de Fénelon [1651–1715].

I LIFE AND WORK AS A TEACHER. (Lupton, Introd.)

1 The convent for "New Catholics."

2 Preceptor of a son of Louis XIV [1689–1695].

a His famous work. (Barnard's JR., XIII, 477–494; XXX, 481–490; Comptre, 177–182).

b Books composed for his royal pupil:

1) Collection of Fables.

2) Dialogues of the Dead.

3) The Existence of God.

4) Telemachus.
c Teaching with him an art.

II FÉNELON'S "THE EDUCATION OF GIRLS." (Lupton; Sallwürk.)
1 Written in 1680; published in 1687.
   a How the book came to be written.
2 Analysis of the work.
   a Importance of the education of girls.
   b Defects in the ordinary education of girls.
   c Fundamental principles in the education of both boys and girls.
      1) Imitation.
      2) Indirect instruction.
      3) Pleasurable activity.
      4) Use of stories.
      5) Religious instruction.
   d Merits, faults, and duties of women.

Suggestions as to Reading.
Faguet and Gerard in French, and Sallwürk and Schmid in German contain good critical articles, Faguet being particularly good. Sallwürk contains a good sixty-page introduction on the life and writings of Fénélon. The English-reading student will find the articles in Barnard, Compayré, and Williams most useful. Lupton's edition of the Education of Girls contains a short biography. Van Laun contains a short chapter on Fénélon in the history of literature. Munroe has but a few pages on Fénélon, though these are good.

Suggestions as to Reading.

Cadet is a valuable work, containing as it does the better parts of Rollin’s work, abridged from the three volume [Paris, 1872] edition. Barnard contains about thirty pages of extracts from the more important parts of Rollin’s work, and is a valuable English reference. Compayré contains a good chapter on Rollin, with an abstract of his Treatise. Buisson, Williams, and Van Laun contain good short articles.
XXVIII LA SALLE, AND THE BEGINNING OF PRIMARY EDUCATION IN FRANCE.

3 Suggestions as to Reading.

Of the Authorities in group 1, †Allain, Babeau, Beaurepaire, Muteau, Rebecq, and Soulîce are special researches, and will be of interest only to the special investigator. Many additional references of a similar nature will be found under Section XXXIV. †Azarias, which is an abstract of †Allain, and Arnold, Barnard, and Kemp contain good short chapters on the status of elementary education in France after the Reformation. †Allain presents the Catholic view, and Ravelet, under group 2, contains a detailed chapter from a similar point of view. La Croix contains a general chapter on education and the condition of the people, but it is not of first importance. Schmid contains 45 pages on schools and the theory of education in France in the sixteenth century.

Of the Authorities in group 2, Ravelet is the standard work on La Salle, his predecessors, and the work of the Brothers of the Christian Schools. Written from a very sympathetic point of view, it is an eloquent and a valuable contribution, and should be consulted by the general as well as the special student. †Allain and the chapters cited in †Azarias contain shorter historical sketches, written from the same sympathetic point of view. Buisson contains short biographical and critical sketches of La Salle, Madame de Maintenon, St. Cyr, etc. Faguet contains very good chapters on Madame de Maintenon, Pascal, Fênelon, etc. Greard contains a good detailed chapter on the work of Madame de Maintenon. Salwürk contains 23 pages on Madame de Maintenon, with a sketch of St. Cyr. Schmid devotes 100 pages to Fênelon, Madame de Maintenon, and education in France in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. The chapters in Barnard and †Barnard are good, though the first is short. Perhaps the best condensed chapter on this section of the Syllabus is in Compyrë.

The general student will do well to read the chapter in Compyrë first, and then supplement this by reading some of the chapters in Ravelet or Azarias for the Catholic point of view, and the chapter in Kemp. See the many citations in the pages of the Syllabus for more detailed suggestions as to reading.

THE GRAMMAR SCHOOL AT STRATFORD-ON-AVON.

The upper picture shows the Guild Chapel and the exterior of the Grammar School to which Shakespeare went when a boy. The school was founded in the 14th century and the exterior is to-day very much as it was in Shakespeare's time. The school-room is in the upper story of the building. The lower floor was the old Guild Hall, in which meetings were held and companies of strolling players often performed.

The lower picture shows the interior of the Grammar School room. The room itself is much the same as it used to be, but when the building was "restored" in 1892 modern school seats, book cases, and teacher's desk were put in place, so that the furniture gives the room a modern aspect. V TRADITIONS ESTABLISHED.
1 The "English Public School System" as established by 1600.
2 Influence of these schools in fixing the traditions of English secondary education.
   a Aristocratic nature of these schools.
   b Opposition of the masters, fellows, and many of the English people to an extension of secondary education.

VI ELEMENTARY EDUCATION.
1 The religious troubles of the 17th century engrossed the attention of the clergy, resulting in:
   a Stagnation within the Church.
   b Almost complete neglect of the education of the poor.
2 Primary school foundations and Charity Schools belong to the 18th century.
3 Conditions not materially changed from what they were before the Reformation. (See Syllabus, pp. 145, 146.)
4 Progress in Scotland contrasted with conditions in England. (Barnard's Jr., IX, 215–224; *Hazlitt, ch. xii; Mackintosh, II, 397–405, III, 375–388; Russell; Steven.)

7 Suggestions as to Reading.
The student will probably find the short general chapters in Adams, Holman, Keutinge, Mark, and Spaulding quite useful as an outline. Gasquet, Mullinger, Traill, Wishart, Wright, and Montmorency deal particularly with the effect of the suppression of the monastaries. Gasquet presents the Catholic point of view in a fair and scholarly work. Wishart contains a good popular statement. Wright is a volume of sources, useful chiefly to the specialist. Montmorency represents a vast amount of scholarly research, and is a well written and a valuable work; *Leach is a mine of useful information. Schmid contains a detailed account of English schools and theory in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. The citations to Traill, though short, are usually good.

Of the Authorities in group 2, Grant and Stevens are specialized histories. Graham and Mackintosh contain good general chapters. Russell is an abstract of Grant, and as such is valuable. Barnard contains a brief digest of the Scottish Education Acts of 1404, 1506, 1615, 1633, 1696, and 1828.

The Authorities in group 3 bear on special points. All are of value, but Baynes, Field, *Hazlitt, and Tuer are particularly useful pieces of research. *Hazlitt is a bibliography of school books and schools.

Of the Authorities in group 4, Aronstein is a valuable condensed sketch. Most of the references of this group contain extracts from the sources. Lupton is a particularly valuable work. Shelton and Timbs relate to student life and studies.

Of the Special Histories in group 5, Cust, *Leach, Lyte, and Rouse are perhaps the most valuable, *Leach being particularly useful for the purposes of this section.

The general student will find the citations in *Leach for Winchester, *Leach for Reformation conditions, and *Hazlitt for St. Paul's, Merchant Taylors', and the subject matter of instruction, good ones from which to obtain an outline of this section.

3 Suggestions as to reading.

The Abell Edition, printed in London, and in Boston, is the best edition for use. The introduction, bibliography, and explanation of Ascham’s method of teaching Latin, though short, are of much value. The extracts in Barnard are of use only when a complete edition is not available.

Of the Secondary Authorities and General Works in group 2, the chapters cited in Fitch, Hazlitt, *Laurie, †Laurie, Payne, Quick, and Watson are all good, and the general student should read one or two of the list. The articles in Browning, Gill, Morley, and Traill are shorter and of decidedly less value than those in the previous group. Mark contains many scattered citations to Ascham. Katterfeld is a German edition of his works, chiefly valuable for a 15-page bibliography. Carlisle, Giles, and Barnard contain additional biographical material.

3 Suggestions as to Reading.

Of the editions of the Tractate, the ones edited by Browning or Morris are the most satisfactory. Both contain good introductions and notes, but in this respect Morris is perhaps the better.

Of the Secondary Authorities and General Works, Masson contains an excellent chapter on Milton, Hartlib, and Comenius, and an analysis of the Tractate, and is the best, though the longest, of the references. After this, Laurie, Laurie, and Quick are perhaps the most valuable. Brooks contains a good essay. Mark contains many scattered references to Milton and his work. Barnard contains a good sketch of the life and times of Milton, condensed from Masson’s Life. The chapters in Browning, Gill, and Williams are short and somewhat unsatisfactory.

3 Suggestions as to Reading.
   Both of the editions of Mulcaster's Educational Writings are carefully edited and both contain a good short biographical sketch. The student would do well at least to look over the analytical table of contents of the “Positions” and read at least one of the chapters.
   Of the Secondary Authorities, †Quick contains the best general article. Watson is good on the “Elementarie.” Hazlitt and Williams are also useful, though not to be preferred to †Quick. Barnard contains a brief biographical note and a short digest of the “Positions.”

3 Suggestions as to Reading.

The reprints of the various treatises contained in the various publications by Barnard are all valuable and interesting as source material. Of the Secondary Authorities, the articles by Watson are well-written and are particularly valuable. The Memoir by Dickes contains a good biographical sketch and bibliography of Hartlib's publications, as well as a reprint of one of his pamphlets. The pages cited in Masson are also good on the relations of Hartlib and Comenius. Both of these works are cited again later on under Comenius. Barnard and Quick contain short general articles on the early realists. Bevan is a special research, of but minor value to the student of educational history. Brinsley, in Barnard's Jr., is a short abstract of the treatise. Marks contains a number of scattered references to the work of these early reformers.

7 The new method of study and the new field of investigation opened up.
   a The method more valuable than the results.

III FRANCIS BACON [1561–1626]. (*Barnard, 77–79; †Barnard, 273–290; Barnard’s Jr., V, 663–681; Beard, ch. xi; Caird, 124–156; †Cajori, 48–50; Dittes, 188–196; Ency. Brit., art. Bacon; Fowler 1–145; Laurie, ch. x; Munroe, ch. iii; Paulsen, I, 480–491; Routledge, ch. vi; Schmid, III, Pt. I, 410–439; Williams, ch. v.)
1 His political fortunes. (Macaulay; Nichol, I.)
2 Instauratio Magna.
   a Design, plan, and progress. (Nichol, II, pt. 2, ch. i, and pp. 258–259.)
3 The dignity of knowledge, his Advancement of Learning [1603–1605].
   (Nichol, II, pt. 2, ch. ii; Wright Ed., introd.)
4 Human reason in the investigation of phenomena,—his Novum Organum [1620]. (Barnard’s Jr., V, 654–674; Fowler; Munroe, ch. vi; Nichol, II, pt. 2, ch. iii.)
   a Insufficiency of the method of argumentation.
b Analysis and formulation of the inductive method.
   1) Its fruitfulness in the hands of his successors.
   c Pointed out the immense field in which the method might be used.
      (Fowler, 126–131.)
   d Knowledge a process, not an end.
5 Bacon’s contribution to scientific progress. (*Barnard, 79–95; Barnard’s Jr., V, 674–681; Fowler, 98–131; Munroe, ch. vi; Rémusat, bk. 4, ch. ii.)
   a Renaissance energy turned in a new direction.
   b Effect of his work on educational method. (Laurie, ch. x.)
      1) Application to education,—Comenius. (Syllabus, sect. XXXII.)

IV RENÉ DESCARTES [1596–1650], THE FOUNDER OF MODERN PHILOSOPHY. (*Cajori, 183–199; Fischer; Huxley, I, 166–198; Lewes, II, 1st Ep., ch. iii; Paulsen, I, 480–491; Torrey, 1–34; Williams, ch. v.)
   1 State of philosophy at the time of Descartes. (Lowndes, 1–43.)
   2 He rejected all that had gone before.
      a His method.
      b The evidence basis. (Lévy-Bruhl, ch. i.)
      3 His Discours de la Methode [1637]. (Compayré, 187–192; Lévy-Bruhl, ch. ii; Torrey.)
         a Why published his work in French instead of Latin.
         b The new and the old subjects.
         c Inquiry and reason instead of authority.
         d Observation and experiment.
         e He both formed and expressed the spirit of his age.
         f Completely displaced Aristotle in the popular mind. (Fowler, 72–86.)
   1) Opposition of the Universities and the Jesuits.
4 Descartes’s work as a mathematician. (*Ball, 236–247; *Cajori, 183–199; Lodge, ch. vi; Routledge, 148–168.)
   a The new Cartesian Geometry [1637].
   b His work on optics, refraction, lenses, and the spectrum.

V SIR ISAAC NEWTON [1642–1727]. (*Ball, ch. xvi; †Ball, chs. iv, v; Fowler, 121–126; Lodge, chs. vii–ix; Routledge, ch. viii; Wheat- well, II.)
   1 His Principia [1687]. (Lodge, ch. ix.)
      a His three “Laws of Motion.”
      b His “Law of Gravitation.”
THE NEW SCIENTIFIC METHOD.

c The motions of planets and comets demonstrated. The tides explained. Kepler’s laws demonstrated. Dynamics reduced to an exact science.

d Discovered [with Leibnitz] the Calculus.

e Experimented with the spectrum [1666]. Explained the nature of light.

f Other scientific work.

2 Opposition to his theories.

GRANTHAM FREE GRAMMAR SCHOOL.

(The school attended by Isaac Newton as a boy. A good picture of the exterior of such a school, that of the Old Grammar School at Taunton, will be found in Green’s Short History of the English People, 11ld. Ed., II, p. 606.)

VI INFLUENCE OF THE NEW MOVEMENT. (Barnard’s Jr., XXII, 33–38.)

1 The rise of learned societies.

1603 The Lynean Society at Rome.
1610 Jungius founded the Natural Science Association at Rostock.
1657 The Academia del Cimento at Florence.
1645 The Royal Society of London. Meetings held in 1645; constituted in 1660; chartered, 1662. (Fowler, 112–119.)
1662 The Imperial Academy of Germany.
1666 The Academy of Sciences in France.
1675 National Observatory at Greenwich.
2. On the universities.
   b. Baconian philosophy studied at both Oxford and Cambridge by 1675. (Fowler, 119–121.)
   c. Newtonian philosophy taught at Oxford by the beginning of the eighteenth century, and well established by 1740. (Wordsworth, 64–81.)
   d. Cambridge became the center for mathematical study, and under the influence of the Newtonian philosophy, mathematics took the place held by logic in the mediæval university.
      1) Course of reading and books used at Cambridge. (†Ball, 92–95, 156–158; Wordsworth, 64–81.)
      2) Studies at Cambridge, 1815–1818. (Wordsworth, 76–78.)
   e. Mathematical and scientific studies on the Continent.
      1) Rejuvenescence of the University of Paris [1680–1700].
      2) The German Universities. (Paulsen.)

VII FURTHER ADVANCES.

4 Suggestions as to Reading.

Of the Works relating to Scientific Discovery, those by Ball, Cajori, and Fink are useful condensed histories. Routledge is an excellent popular history of scientific progress, and ought to be owned and read by every scientific student. Lodge contains a number of charmingly written sketches, which many students prefer to the chapters in Routledge. Whewell was long a standard, but is now in part superseded by later writers. The same may be said of Hallam. Fischer contains a good clear account of the progress of scientific knowledge, and is excellent on Descartes, though quite long. Beard contains an excellent chapter on the rise of the philosophical method and the progress of scientific investigation.

Of the Authorities in group 2, Church, Fischer, Fowler, Lewes, Lowdes, Nichol, and Rémuusat are to be especially recommended, though all are somewhat long. Chapter VIII in Church, the few pages on Descartes in Compaire, and the chapters in Laurie, and Lévy-Bruhl will be nearer what the average student will need.

Of the Authorities in group 3, the chapters in Barnard are all good. Munroe contains an excellent short chapter on Bacon. Paulsen is good on the Ideal in education. Schmid is on the work of the English universities in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Williams has a chapter on the charactistics of the seventeenth century education. Wordsworth is a valuable special investigation. Much of this section will need to be explained by the instructor, but the general student will find that he can read the citations in Lodge, Routledge, Laurie, and Munroe with profit. The chapter in Church on Bacon's philosophy, or the article in Barnard on Bacon might well be added.
XXXII TWO SEVENTEENTH CENTURY INNOVATORS.

A WOLFGANG RATICHIUS (RATICH, RATKE) [1571-1635].
(*Barnard, 343-370; Barnard's Jr., V, 229-256, VI, 459-466; Browning, 51-60; Dittes, 144-166; Fischer, 67-77; Paulsen, I, 460-465; Plath, §15; Quick, ch. ix; Regener, 91-98; Schiller, 149-167; Schmid, III, Pt. 2, 1-92; Williams, 154-162; Ziegler, 146-154.)

I RATKE AND HIS SCHEME OF EDUCATION.
1 His life. (Vogt, 6-184.)
2 His address to the Princes at the Electoral Diet, Frankfurt-am-Main, 1612. (Richter, pt. ix, 24-32.)
   a The startling proposals regarding education.
      1) Favorable report on by Jung and Helwig. (Richter, pt. ix; Vogt, 228-235.)
      2) Ready acceptance of any remarkable scheme a characteristic of the period.
   b Augsburg tried Ratke's Method.
   c Koethen also tried the new method. (Richter, pt. xii.)
      1) Nature of the school.
      2) Method of teaching.
      3) The result.
   d Favorable report on to Oxenstiern [1634]. (Richter, pt. xii, 110-125.)
3 Rules laid down in the Methodus Nova [Leipzig, 1617]. (Vogt, 185-227.)
   a The order of nature.
   b One thing at a time.
   c Repetition.
   d Use of the mother tongue.
   e Every thing without constraint.
   f Learning by heart.
   g Uniformity.
   h Things vs words.
   i Individual experience and contact vs authority.
4 Pioneer work in method.
   a Comparison with Ascham.
   b Contribution to educational progress.
   c Work in counteracting the influence of the Jesuits. (*Barnard, 335-342; Barnard's Jr., VI, 439-466.)

3 Suggestions as to Reading.

Both of the Sources are very valuable. The first number in the Richter collection contains an introduction and a reprint of the memorial to the Diet of 1612 and the report of the Jena and Giessen professors; the second contains the Kothen Lehrplan of 1619, the Magdeburg document of 1620, the report to Oxenstiern in 1634, and two of Ratke's Kothen texts. Vogt contains a detailed sketch of Ratke's life, a description of his Didaktik, and a reprint of the reports of the Jena and Giessen professors.

Of the Secondary Authorities, Quick contains the best general chapter for the English reading student. The articles in Barnard are also very good. Williams contains a short condensed sketch which is good. Of the German works, Dittes, Paulsen, and Ziegler contain good general chapters. Schmid contains a detailed 90 page sketch. Fischer contains a good analytical outline, written in easy German. Plath, Regener and Schiller contain short general articles, useful as an outline or for practice in reading German.

The general student would best read the chapter in Quick, and supplement this with the articles in Barnard.
JOHN AMOS COMENIUS.

B John Amos Comenius [1592–1671].

V COMENIUS’ PLACE IN THE HISTORY OF EDUCATION. (Butler; Davidson, 190–208; Hanus; Hoffmeister; Kayser, 84–148; Keatinge, 124–138, 148–152; Laurie, Intro. and Concl.; 2Laurie; §Laurie, ch. xi; 3Monroe, chs. ix, x; 1Monroe; Munroe, ch. iv; Müller; Seyffarth; Witte.)

1 State of the educational problem in Comenius’ time. Work of:— a Luther and Melanethon.
b John Sturm at Strassburg.
c John Calvin at Geneva.
d John Knox and George Buchanan in Scotland.
e Roger Ascham and John Milton in England.
f Wolfgang Ratke in Germany.

2 Debt to, and advances over his predecessors.
3 Modern reforms which he anticipated.
4 Why he influenced his times so little.

VI PRACTICAL EFFECT OF THE WORK OF RATKE AND COMENIUS.
1 Schools and School Orders in German States. (Ziegler, 164–167.)
2 Duke Ernst the Pious of Gotha [1601–1675]. (Fischer, 97–101; Nohle, 42–44; Plath, §17; Schmid, IV, Pt. 1, 2–74; Ziegler, 164–167.)
a A practical follower of Comenius.
b His Schulmethodus [1642], or organization plan for the Volkschule. (Plath, 146–153; Seeley, 22–23.)
c Significance of his work.

6 Suggestions as to Reading.

Of the Sources which have been reprinted, Comenius, Keatinge, and Munroe are especially valuable, and ought to be in every library. The reprint of Comenius' "Orbis Pictus" has been done with care, and Mr. Bardeen has rendered a distinct service in reproducing it. Every student should look the book over at least. Keatinge's edition of "The Great Didactic" is an equally important work, and the critical biography and historical introduction which precede the translation are of the first importance. Monroe's edition of the "Muttersschule" is another important translation, and the general student, having but little time to give to a study of this section, could still read a few of the chapters with pleasure and profit. The Monatschafte contains many reprints, extracts from sources, historical articles, etc. Richter is a reprint of an early edition, but is of but minor value in view of Monroe's translation.

Of the Important Secondary Authorities in group 2, *Laurie and *Monroe are the standard English biographies. The American edition of *Laurie contains a good illustrated appendix on the text books of Comenius, and is to be preferred to the English edition. Either of the two biographies is well worth reading. Kestinge, mentioned above, is an equally valuable work. Of the German biographies, Kayser, Seyffarth, Stuebelin, and Witte are valuable biographical and critical sketches. Müller is a recent Doctor's thesis at Jena and is a philosophical-historical research. Witte is an address, delivered on the 300th anniversary of Comenius' birth, on the historical significance of the work of Comenius, with reference to the Volkschule. Hoffmeister is relatively of minor value. Maxwell is a review of the "Orbis Pictus," the Bardeen reprint being illustrated by pictures selected from this work.

Of the Important Secondary Authorities in group 3, containing a good chapter on the life and work of Comenius, the works by Laurie, Quick, and Munroe should receive particular mention. The address by Butler is an excellent statement. Hanus is also an excellent article. Williams contains a good general article, but it is not to be preferred to Munroe or Quick. Dircks and Masson, two excellent works, contain good chapters on Comenius' visit to London and his relations with Hartlib. Plath has a good general article in German, with short extracts from Comenius' works. Schmid has a long article on Alsted, Arndt, Comenius, and Duke Ernst, their work, and their relation to one another.

Of the shorter and more general authorities in group 4, Compayré and Kemp are to be preferred of the English references. All of the German references, except Paulsen, contain 15 to 20-page general articles. Fischer has one of the best of the brief articles, it being in the form of an analytical summary.

The references in group 5 all refer to single points, and are cited at the proper place in the Syllabus. Bardeen's brief note on the text-books of Comenius is inferior to Maxwell, cited under group 8, or to the Appendix in Bardeen's edition of *Laurie. Hazlitt has two good short chapters on Lily's famous Grammar and the successors of Lily. Ball relates to the teaching of Arithmetic, and Noble and Seeley to the work of Duke Ernst. Vostrovačky is an interesting and valuable translation and reprint of a school course of study of the time.

The general student would do best, if he can afford the time, to read *Laurie or *Monroe or the biographical sketch and critical introduction in Kestinge. The style of Laurie is perhaps the most attractive, and Kestinge is most valuable from a critical point of view. After these works, if shorter references are desired, *Laurie or Quick, and Munroe will probably prove of greatest value. The Bardeen edition of the "Orbis Pictus" ought to be glanced over, and a chapter or two, at least, of The School of Infancy and The Great Didactic could be read with profit. The reading might well close with the short addresses by Butler or Hanus.

4 Suggestions as to Reading.

Of the Sources, †Quick is the standard edition of Locke’s “Thoughts on Education.” The biographical and critical introduction adds greatly to the value of the work. Sallwürke is a similarly well-prepared German edition.

Of the Important Secondary Authorities under group 2, Bourne, Fowler, and Frazer are good biographies, each of which contains a good chapter on Locke’s life at Oxford, but the chapters in these same works on Locke’s “Thoughts” are of much less value than the chapters in Munroe, or Quick, or Laurie. Lewes and Uebenweg deal with Locke’s place in the history of philosophy. Schmid contains a 60 page article on Locke’s ideas and influence. The article in †Barnard is a short sketch of Locke’s life and an analysis of his “Thoughts,” while the article in Barnard, reprinted from Barnard’s Journal, in addition to the above, contains a series of extracts from the “Thoughts” which embrace more than half of the volume.
Of the Authorities in group 3, containing short general articles, Browning, Compayré, Leitch, and Williams contain the best chapters for the English-reading student. Leitch contains a good account of what Locke proposed. Mark contains many short references to Locke. Gill has a fair general chapter. Schiller and Dittes are quite short, and will be useful chiefly for practice in reading German. Leipzig is a recent Doctor's thesis at Leipzig, 53 pages in length, and on a point of interest only to the special investigator.

The general student will find Quick's edition of the Thoughts on Education the best single reference. The first two references by Bernard also contain good material. After Quick, Munroe and Laurie, or Munroe and Quick will probably be of greatest value.

5 Suggestions as to Reading.

Of the Sources, the translation of the Émile by Payne is the standard translation, and contains a good introduction by the translator. The abridged edition, translated by Eleanor Worthington and with a short introduction by Jules Steeg, will probably answer the needs of the general student better than the complete edition. The Confessions, a study in mental pathology, while a valuable side-light on the life of Rousseau and the influences under which he worked, are of little value to the average student and may be passed by with advantage. Davidson gives as much on Rousseau’s life as the student will ever need.

Of the Authorities in group 2, Davidson is the most complete work of a strictly educational nature. In it Rousseau’s educational theories are examined in the light of Rousseau’s life and the ideas and aspirations current at the time. The result is not particularly favorable to Rousseau. Compayré, the first in a series of short French biographies known as Les grands éducateurs series, is a somewhat more sympathetic work. Morley’s two-volume work on Rousseau is excellent, but too long for ordinary use. Craddock is a good book on Rousseau’s life, confessions, friendships, and opinions, but bears only indirectly on his educational work. Of the shorter articles, Compayré, Munroe, and Quick are very good, and probably will form the general student’s best references. Lévy-Brühl contains a good and readable but somewhat general chapter.

Of the Secondary Authorities of lesser importance, Browning, Hailman, Lang, Kemp, and Williams are the most useful. Street and Wier are good short magazine articles, well worth reading. Graham is a good short biography, but has little on Rousseau’s educational work. Herisson is a thesis on a single point, and as such is valuable. The articles in the German works are all short and quite general. All of the General Works of group 4, with the exception of Goldsmith, which is an essay on education thought by some to have served as a suggestion to Rousseau, contain good general chapters on Rousseau’s life, work, and place in literature and history, but they are quite general and because of this are of but secondary value to the student of the history of education. Caird, Faguet, and Van Laun are perhaps the best of this group.

The general student, having but a limited amount of time to devote to this section, will probably find Munroe and Quick the most valuable of the shorter general articles. Davidson is the best of the longer English works. If time permits, the abridged edition of the Émile might be added. For further suggestions see the pages of the Syllabus.
XXXIV THE REVOLUTION AND EDUCATION IN FRANCE.

(Arnold, ch. iv; Babeau; Barnard’s Jr., XX, 217-218; †Compayré, II; Dreyfus-Brissac, III, 250-286; Dumespil; Duruy; *Min. Publ. Instr., 8-12; ‡Min. Publ. Instr., 1-12; Picavet, 43-64; Teegan, ch. i. For the text of all laws and decrees adopted see Beauchamp, or Gréard.)

   b Montesquieu [1689-1755]. Lettres Persanes [1721]; L’esprit des lois [1748]. (Lévy-Brühl, ch. v; Van Laun, 23-36.)
   c The work of Voltaire [1694-1778]. (Faguet, 193-278; Lévy-Brühl, ch. vi; Van Laun, III, 43-66.)

   Social [1762]; Emile [1762]. (Syllabus, sect. XXXIII.)

2 Increasing power of public opinion; increasing demand for reforms.

3 Meeting of the States-General [May 5, 1789].
   a Declared itself The Constituent Assembly [June 17, 1789].
   b Fall of the Bastille [July 14, 1789].
4 The Legislative Assembly [Oct. 1, 1791—Sept. 21, 1792].
5 The Constitutional Convention proclaimed a Republic [1792].

III THE IDEA OF NATIONAL EDUCATION. (†Allain; *Compayré, chs. xiv, xv; †Compayré, II, chs. vi, vii; Dumesnil, ch. ii.)
1 Work of the philosophers in preparing the way for the secularization of education.
2 Decline in vigor of the Jesuits and failure of their schools to change to meet the needs of the times. (§Allen, ch. xi; *Compayré, 340–343.)
   a Complaints against their system [1762].
   b Expulsion of the Order from France [1764].
3 Demand for civil instead of religious teachers.
   a "Brothers of the Christian Schools" suppressed [1792]. (Rav-alalet, bk. III, ch. iii; Syllabus, p. 183.)
4 La Chalotais' Essai d'éducation nationale [1763]. (Buisson; *Compayré, ch. xv; †Compayré, II, 207–226.)
   a Education a civil affair; citizen teachers.
   b Education to make French citizens.
   c Studies from five to ten.
   d Studies from ten to seventeen.
      1) Character of the proposals.
   e Views on the extension of popular education.
   f Merits of the treatise.
5 Rolland's Report to the Parliament of Paris [1768]. (Buisson; *Compayré, ch. xv; †Compayré, II, 227–248.)
   a His views on the extension of popular education, the training of teachers, and the centralization of education.
   b Seconded by Turgot [1775].
6 The right of the State to preserve itself through education.
7 Demands of the Cahiers of 1789 as to education. (Grimaud, 6–10.)

IV LEGISLATIVE ATTEMPTS AT ORGANIZATION. (Barnard's Jr., XXII, 651–664, for abstract of proposals; *Compayré, chs. xvi, xvii.)
   a The Catholic view.
   b The anti-Catholic view.
   c Communities of the Brothers of the Christian Schools. (See map, Syllabus, p. 182.)
II THE NEW SPIRIT IN THE UNIVERSITIES. (Painter, 261–266; Williams, ch. x.)

1 Halle [1694] the first modern University. (Noble, 45–46; Paulsen, 57–65; Paulsen, I, 520–550; Ziegler, 174–179.)
   a Nature of its Faculty.
   b Gundling [1711] discussed "The office of a University."
      1) Beginnings of Lehrfreiheit.
   c Christian Wolff [Prof. 1707–1723, 1740–1754] appealed to reason, "Made philosophy speak German."

2 The new methods in classical study. (Schiller, 289–298; Ziegler, 246–255, 258–269.)
   a J. M. Gesner at the new University of Göttingen. (*Barnard, 521–529; Barnard’s Jr., V, 741–752; Noble, 46–50; Paulsen, II, 9–45; Schiller, 289–296.)
   b Reform work of:
      1) Ernesti [Thomaschule, Leipsig]. (*Barnard, 530–532.)
      2) Frederick August Wolf [Halle]. (*Barnard, 561–573; Barnard’s Jr., VI, 260–272; Painter, 261–266; Paulsen, II, 208–245; Schiller, 320–329.)
   c This a modern Renaissance.
   d Meaning of this work for secondary education. (Schiller, 298–320.)

III THE NEW INDEPENDENT SPIRIT IN LITERATURE. (Ziegler, 255–260.)

1 Use of German, Latin, and French in the 17th century.
   a The reformers and the vernacular.
   b Wolff’s lectures on philosophy.
   c Satirists expose French follies.
   d The overthrow of French classicism and the foundation of a national German-literature.

2 Levelling effect of the rising individualism.
3 The aspirations of the leading thinkers.
4 The work and influence of Klopstock, Wieland, Lessing, Herder, Kant, Fichte, Goethe, and Schiller. (*Barnard, 547–560; Barnard’s Jr., VI, 195–208; Compeyre, 322–323; K. Francke, chs. vii, viii; Paulsen, II, 189–208; Vogt, 1–43; Williams, 309–317; Ziegler, 281–288.)
   a The new ideal for humanity.
   b The new aristocracy of worth.
   c Storm and stress period.
   d The classics of individualism.
IV INFLUENCE OF THE THEORISTS AND REFORMERS. (Hailman, lect. viii.)

1 John Locke. (Syllabus, sect. XXXIII, A.)
2 Jean-Jacques Rousseau. (Syllabus, sect. XXXIII, B.)
3 Immanuel Kant [1724-1804]. (Browning, 165-174; Churton; Compayré, 332-338; Davidson, 220-229; McIntyre.)
   a His lectures Über Pädagogik. (Churton; Vogt.)
   b The new moral, or culture ideal. (Buchner.)
4 Johann Basedow [1723-1790] and his followers. (Syllabus, sect. XXXV, C.)

4 Suggestions as to Reading.

Of the Sources, Churton is a valuable translation, and with Buchner, mentioned below in group 2, will furnish all that the average student will need on Kant. Of the sources on Francke, the first three contain biographical and critical introductions, that in †Kramer being twice the length of the others.

Of the Important Secondary Authorities, the articles in Barnard are particularly valuable, and contain about all that the general student will need. Russell contains an excellent general chapter on the whole period which is very valuable as a good general outline. Bache, a classic report, contains 20 pages of description of Francke's Institutions as they were in 1838. Nohl, translated from Rein, contains about 20 pages on the eighteenth century in Germany which will be found valuable. Williams also contains a good chapter, though it is quite brief. Of the German works Fischer is a standard history of the Volksschule, volume I containing valuable chapters on its status down to 1790. *Kramer is a valuable life of Francke. All of the German histories of education contain good chapters, Dittes, †Paulsen, and Ziegler being the most valuable.

Of the Minor Authorities in group 3, Kemp and Painter contain the most useful general chapters. Browning, Compayré, Davidson, and McIntyre relate to Kant; and Fischer and Hailman to Francke's work. Francke contains a very good general chapter on the Storm and Stress period.

The general student will find Russell the most valuable single reference, and Nohl and the articles in Barnard good to supplement with. For more detailed suggestions see the citations in the pages of the Syllabus.

THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY IN GERMANY.

4 Suggestions as to Reading.

Of the Sources the ones contained in Barnard’s Journal and reprinted in *Barnard are very valuable and should be consulted. They contain the famous Regulations of 1703 and 1705 in full, and the Austrian law of 1774. All of the German sources are good. Hepp is an old standard history, which traces the history of the Volksschule in departments and by territories from the Reformation. Meyer contains all laws, regulations, and decrees for forty years, and is a collection of sources of a kind not often found.

Of the Important Secondary Authorities, the articles in Barnard’s Journal, reprinted in *Barnard, are especially valuable. After Barnard the English student will find Noble and Russell most useful. Of the German histories of education, Dittes and Ziegler contain good short chapters on the Volksschule, and Plath, Regener, Schiller, and Schmid contain digests of the Regulations and a sketch of eighteenth century progress. Fischer contains a valuable chapter on the time of the “Aufklärung,” 1750–1790.

Of the General Works, Each contains a picture of the times of Fürstenberg,—the influence of the work of Rousseau, Béchard, Frederick the Great, the suppression of the Jesuits, etc.,—and reproduces school orders and reforms from 1770 to 1801. Friasch contains a good biographical sketch of Felbiger. Tupetz contains a brief sketch of the Austrian reforms, and Foerster an abstract of Frederick the Great’s Regulation of 1763. The last two are of but minor value.

The general student will find Noble and Russell, which may have been read in connection with the preceding section, and the articles and Regulations in Barnard all that he will need for the purposes of this section. Only the special student will need more than these contain.
C Johann Bernard Basedow and the Philanthropinum (1723–1790).

4 Suggestions as to Reading.

Of the Sources, the reprint of Basedow’s Elementarwerk is one of the most valuable. Wherever possible this book should be examined and compared with the Orbis Pictus of Comenius. The two reprints by Richter are interesting to examine and valuable to have. Göring contains a good biography of Basedow and a reproduction of his Methodenbuch and selections from the Elementarwerk. The other sources relate to Basedow’s followers. The first two are preceded by a short biographical and critical sketch.

Of the Important Secondary Authorities, the most important articles in English are the article in Barnard’s Journal on Basedow and the Philanthropinum and the chapters in Quick and Williams. Probably the most important work is Pinloche, which is a very valuable contribution to our knowledge of the work of Basedow and his position in the history of education. This work has been translated into German (†Pinloche), and ought to be translated into English. Diestelmann is another important biography, though much shorter than Pinloche. It is only 110 pages long, and is one of the numbers of the Große Erzieher series. Garrovicius is another important short piece of work (83 pp.) which the special student will find of much value. The chapter in Konrad Fischer is the same one cited in the preceding division of the Syllabus. It relates to the “Aufklärung,” 1750–1790, and is good. Ziegler has a good article on the influence of Rousseau’s Emile on Basedow, the work of the Philanthropinum, and the condition of education during the period. Otto Fischer, Plath, Regener, Schiller, and Schmid contain general chapters on Basedow, his work, and his followers.

Of the Minor Secondary Authorities, Lang is a good and very readable essay. Kemp and Payne contain short sketches, the main defect of which is their brevity. Hahn is a Doctor’s dissertation of some note.

The general student will probably find Quick or Williams, and the articles in Barnard’s Journal the most useful of the English works for the purposes of this section. Lang or Kemp will also prove of value, though not to be preferred to Barnard and Quick.

a Responsibility of those in authority in the State.

2 The family the center of education.
a Place of the mother in the education of the child.
b The school an outgrowth and a supplement.
c Conditions which the school must fulfill.

3 Verbal education vs practical education.
a Kind of education needed by the poorer classes.
b Learning to do something. (Barnard's Jr., X, 81–92; same art. in XXI, 765–776.)

4 Elementary education a necessity.

VIII THE NATURE OF ELEMENTARY EDUCATION. (*Hailman, lect. x; Payne, 97–114; Pinloche, 149–208; Quick, 354–383; †Seyffarth; Vogel, 27–94, 234–276.)

1 What and how the lower classes were taught.
a Superficial and harmful character of such instruction as was given.
b The monastic method.

2 School education not a thing apart from life.

3 The early training of the mother.

6 Suggestions as to Reading.

Of the Sources, the articles in Barnard's Journal, most of which are reproduced in Barnard, are particularly valuable. Diesterweg describes in a very appreciative manner, the condition of the schools before Pestalozzi and the influence on them of his life and work. The article describing student life at Yverdon is “by one having no prejudices in favor of popular education,” and describes the life of the school. The article on Fellenberg and Hofwyl is from the report of a visit made by John Griscom in 1818, and describes what he saw. Krūsi is a reproduction of a general plan, published at Yverdon in 1818, which gives the ideas and methods of Pestalozzi. Krusi is a translation of an address delivered by the elder Krūsi in 1839, and is excellent as a sympathetic sketch. Mann is a collection of Pestalozzi's more popular writings, with a 122 page biographical sketch prefixed. The edition is in no way to be preferred to the standard complete edition by Seysbarth, the last revised edition of which has completely superseded all other editions of Pestalozzi's works. Of the separately edited volumes of Pestalozzi's works, the abridged edition of Leonard and Gertrude is the one most frequently read. This is a good edition, and students will find it well worth reading. It probably more thoroughly expresses Pestalozzi's faith in the power of education than any other of his writings. The style is delightful, and the book is one of the classics of educational literature. The How Gertrude Teaches her Children is an account of Pestalozzi's method which shows the way in which his method was developed, and as such is quite important. The Letters on Early Education are a series of letters which Pestalozzi wrote to an Englishman by the name of Greaves, and deal with the subject of infant education and the direction of mothers in the education of their children.
PESTALOZZI.

Of the Secondary Authorities of First Importance, in group 2, the first article by Barnard is a translation of the sketch of the life and work of Pestalozzi in von Raumer's history of education, and is good, though not to be preferred to some of the more recent biographical sketches. The other articles relate to Pestalozzi's assistants and successors. Of the biographies, Guimps, Krüsi, and Pinloche are the standard works in English. Guimps is a translation from the French, and two editions of it are cited in the bibliography and throughout the pages of the Syllabus. The Bardeen abridged edition contains about two-thirds of what the Appleton complete edition contains, omissions having been made from each chapter. The average student will find the abridged edition about as useful as the complete one. Guimp is the best for the personal side of Pestalozzi's work, while Pinloche is best for a statement of his theory as to education and the influence of his work. Krüsi is an anniversary volume, by the son of Pestalozzi's co-worker, and occupies a somewhat middle ground between Guimps and Pinloche. Of the three, most students will prefer Guimps or Pinloche. Of the German authorities Hunziker is a very good short biographical sketch by the custodian of the Swiss Pestalozzi Museum; Saller is another short sketch in the "Grosse Erzieher" series; volume 1 of the last edition of Seyffarth's Pestalozzi's complete works contains a detailed biography of superior value; and Kayser is a good work of 385 pages in length. Of the French works, Guillaume is the most important. This is even a larger work than Guimps, and is considered complete, exact, and impartial. The work is an enlargement of the author's article, in the Dictionnaire de pédagogie. Cochin is a short work on Pestalozzi's life, work, method, and influence. Of the chapters on the life and work of Pestalozzi contained in Histories of Education, the most valuable are those in Munroe and Quick, and if the student has not time to read such a work as Guimps or Pinloche, these two chapters at least ought to be read.

Of the Secondary Authorities in group 4, Biber and Mörf are old standards which are still of some value, especially to the advanced student. Blochmann is a popular collection of much value. Edelmann, Hofmeister, Schwendimann, Seyffarth, and Sommer are good short biographical and critical sketches or anniversary addresses on the significance of the work of Pestalozzi, Seyffarth being particularly valuable. The analysis in Fischer is the best chapter in the book. Herisson is a valuable thesis; Plath contains a number of extracts and a good general article; Roth is a short popular sketch; and Vogel is a topical analysis of some value.

Of the Secondary Authorities in group 4, containing short general articles, perhaps the best are the chapters in Compyré, Fitch, and Payne. Payne is a good summary of the influence of the work of Pestalozzi on elementary education. The chapters in the general histories of education cited, while good enough in proportion to the scope of the individual volumes, are, nevertheless, short and inferior to the references cited under group 2. Their chief value is that of giving a brief general view.

The articles in group 5 are articles on special points, and as such do not need comment.

The general student will find sufficient guidance in the suggestions given above under groups 1 and 2, and in the citations in the pages of the Syllabus.
HERBART.

B. JOHANN FRIEDRICH HERBART [1776–1841].

(Lang; Plath, § 26; Regener, 107–209; Schiller, 342–378; Schmid, IV, Pt. 2, 752–881; Tompkins; Ziegler, 297–304.)

a Distinction between. Aim of both.
b Government to be supplanted by education.
   1) Necessity of liberty.
c Discipline to be continuous treatment.
   1) Use of punishment.
   2) Use of approbation and disapprobation.
d Necessity of the teacher entering into the feelings of the child.

V HERBART'S DOCTRINE OF INTEREST. (Adams, ch. x; *DeGarmo, pt. 1, ch. v; †Harris; Lange and DeGarmo, pt. 2, sect. ii; *Ufer.)
1 The necessity of interest in character-building.
2 Value of an early many-sided interest.
3 How the cultivation of interest may be reduced to a system.
4 Kinds of interest.
a For knowledge.
b Arising out of association with others.

VI HERBART'S PROCESS OF INSTRUCTION. (*DeGarmo, pt. 1, ch. vi; §DeGarmo; *Felkin, ch. iii; Lang. pt. 2; *Ufer.)
1 The process.
a Presentation, or first method.
b Analysis, valuable for growing minds.
c Synthesis, or highest step in instruction.
2 The method.
a Voluntary attention.
b Involuntary attention.
   1) Method employed.
c Mental absorption and reflection.
d The formal steps of instruction.

5 Suggestions as to Reading.

Of the Editions of Herbart's Works, Willmann is probably the best complete edition, though the single volume editions edited by different persons are to be preferred to the complete edition. The different editions cited are well edited and contain critical introductions of value. †Felkin contains a good biographical and critical introduction with an analysis of the work. †Herbart contains an introduction on Herbart, the Herbartian theory of education, and Herbart and his school. Lange and DeGarmo is one of the best of the series, being exceptionally well edited. Excepting for six letters it contains the same material as ‡Felkin, but is a more satisfactory edition to use.

Of the works on the life of Herbart and his system of education, *DeGarmo is perhaps the most satisfactory. It is a well written account of his work, his educational principles, his successors and followers in Germany and America, and his influence on education. The general student will find this the most useful reference for the purposes of this section of the Syllabus. Lang is a good short introduction to the ideas of Herbart. Adams, *Felkin, and †Ufer are good expositions of Herbart's ideas, though the general student will find them somewhat long and technical. Van Liew is a good book on Herbart's life and the development of his ideas. Of the references cited in group 3, the article in the Encyclopedia Britannica is very good on Herbart's Psychology. Plath, Regener, and Schiller contain general articles on Herbart's life, work, principles, and followers, Regener and Schiller being better than Plath. Natorp is a good work, though only the special student will need to consult it. Of the short articles in English, *Harris, on the sense perception of Pestalozzi vs. apperception of Herbart, ‡DeGarmo on correlation, Tompkins' statement and criticism of Herbart's theory, and †Ufer's statement of Herbart's philosophy and pedagogy are worth reading.

The amount of reading which the general student will need to do on such a section as this and the one following will naturally vary with the amount of time given to the study. To cover adequately the various points in the Syllabus would require at least a month. The general student of the history of education can hardly give this much time to a single section, and hence will probably find *DeGarmo about all that he will have time to read. This work is probably the best single reference.

5 Suggestions as to Reading.

Of the works on the life of Froebel, in group 1, the most important are The Autobiography, translated by Michaelis and Moore, which covers the first thirty-three years of Froebel's life; and *Marenholz-Bülow, which covers the last two years of Froebel's life and is valuable as an exposition of his theories. The early life of Froebel is a valuable commentary on the system of training and theory of education which he later developed. Ebers gives an extended account of Froebel and his institution at Kielhau. *Lange is an interesting reminiscence. Of the writings of Froebel, †Lange is the standard complete edition, and is usually found in libraries. Hallmann's somewhat aoridged translation of the Menschen-Erziehung is the standard English edition, while Blow, or Lord, are standard English editions of the Mutter- und Kose-Lieder. In Lord the original illustrations are retained. $Froebel and $Froebel are on the gifts, games, and occupations, and form our most valuable original authority on the practices and methods of the kindergarten. Heinemann is a series of letters and addresses to the women of Germany. The average student will find Herford's The Student's Froebel more nearly suited to his needs than the complete work by Hallmann. This valuable short work is an abridgment and translation from $Seidel, and contains the more important parts of the work.

Of the Important Secondary Authorities, in group 2, Bowen, Franks, Hansch-mann and Snider are the most important on the life and work of Froebel. Bowen is an excellent outline of Froebel's life, writings, ideas, and influence, and is probably the most useful of the four. Hanschmann is a detailed and our most complete life of Froebel, but it is rather diffuse and in places is quite emotional. Franks, which is a free translation and condensation of Hanschmann, is a good work. Snider is a good sketch of Froebel's early life, his work as a schoolmaster, and the founding of the kindergarten. Shirreff is a good, short, and quite interesting sketch. contains a translation of the letters written from Leipzig and Dresden by Froebel to his first wife, and gives an account of his work there. Of the shorter articles, the chapter in Quick is one of the best. $Barnard is a mine of information and a very valuable collection. Kraus-Boette's two volumes are full and complete, and beautifully illustrated. $Marenholtz-Biilow is an excellent book and contains one of the best summaries of Froebel's principles which we have. Smith is a good, short, popular account of what the kindergarten is, and Wiggin & Smith are a series of popular works which explain kindergarten work in a simple manner.

Of the short general or critical articles, in group 3, Boone and Harris relate to the extension of the kindergarten in America, Harris being an especially valuable note. $Barnard, under group 2, also contains many valuable articles on this point.
Payne contains a detailed description of what he saw on his visit to Germany in 1874. The general histories of education mentioned,—Compayré, Dittes, $Hailmann, Munroe, Plath, and Williams, all contain short general chapters, generally lacking in detail and of but minor value. The remaining magazine articles are good on the point treated, and are worth reading by the student especially interested in the subject.

As in the preceding section on Herbart, the amount of reading which the general student will need to do will depend largely on the amount of time given to the section.
If the student has but little time to devote to the work, Bowen will probably be the best single reference. If time permits the Autobiography might be included with advantage. If the reading must be limited to a single chapter, Quick offers one of the best. If a little time can be devoted to reading from Froebel, Herford's selections from The Education of Man will prove very useful.

Suggestions as to Reading.
Spencer's Essays are well worth reading, though possibly too long for ordinary class use. Of the articles on Spencer's Essays, *Compayré, Jordan, *Laure or †Laurie, and Quick are all good readable chapters. Jordan is a particularly good article. Leitch describes Spencer's proposals, Harris criticises Spencer's first chapter. †Compayré is a good short volume in Les grands éducateurs series.

6 Suggestions as to Reading.

This section of the Syllabus traces the final steps in the development of a centralized and efficient modern state school system. It is both a study in the history of educational development and a study of present conditions. Authorities have been cited for each important step in the process, and frequent references have been given to works where additional facts and statistics can be found by those who may need them. As a result, the section is a very condensed one. The references are abundant, and the list of references is large. This section of the Syllabus, with the three which follow it, offer plenty of material for a semester’s study of comparative school systems. It naturally follows that in a general course on the history of education the instructor will desire to present only the main outline, leaving to the student either certain general reading or individual points to be looked up. For the first the student needs a few good references; for the second the abundant citations of the Syllabus offer sufficient guidance. Accordingly no attempt will be made to discuss the references in detail, the suggestions being confined to calling attention to the more important English references.

Of the Important Sources and Secondary Authorities of group 1, Barnard contains good historical sketches to about 1900; Donaldson contains an excellent chapter on the nineteenth century history of the German Volksschule; Nobles contains a very good short section on nineteenth century development; and Paulsen and Perry contain good short sketches of nineteenth century university development. Conrad is also good on recent university history. Bache, Cousin, and Stowe are classic reports. Of the German works, Clausner, Fischer, and Paulsen are very able works. Schmid contains a very detailed history.

Most of the References under group 2 have been mentioned in connection with previous sections of the Syllabus, and do not need to be repeated here. Adamson is a good popular sketch of Fichte and his works, Cassell is a very good short article, and Smith contains a good biography and a translation of Fichte’s more important works.

Of the Sources and Secondary Authorities in group 3, on the recent history or the present status of the German school system, the most important to the English student are Bache, Dawson, Hart, Hughes, Klemm, Parsons, Hart, Russell, Ware, and Young. Hart, though old, is still probably our best description of German university life, and Paulsen is our best short work on the German universities. For the secondary schools of Germany, Russell is the standard work. Bolton is also a good work on the subject. Young gives many details to the organization and administration of the higher schools. Klemm, Parsons, Perry, and Prince are the results of recent visits to German schools and describe conditions as the observers saw them. Hughes and Ware are books which make a comparative study of education in the principal European states and in America, and contain much of marked value. Hughes is the more important of the two. Ware deals chiefly with the educational basis of trade and industry, and points out the educational advantage of Germany in this connection. Perhaps the best single short article on the German school system as a whole, and on the spirit and ideas of the system rather than the details of its organization, is the chapter in Dawson. The various magazine articles cited relate to particular points and do not need individual mention. Any one of these articles is worth reading if information is wanted on the particular point to which it relates.

Besides the important books mentioned above, the many articles in the English Education Department Special Reports (Eng. Educ. Repts.) and in the Reports of the U. S. Commissioner of Education (Reps. U. S. Com. Educ.) are of the first importance, and the list should be consulted. The American reports are particularly valuable for current statistics and for articles on current educational questions. The articles in the English reports are usually much longer and very valuable. Frequent citations have been made to these two series of reports in the pages of the Syllabus.

Of the German works, Beier, Heinemann, Kaemmel, Pogge, Rein, and Stötzer are worthy of particular mention. Beier contains many tables, is well arranged, and gives a good full presentation. Heinemann describes the details of the organization of the Volksschule. Kaemmel is a plain statement of the conditions and questions involved. Pogge contains the various decrees, and is in reality a copy of the school law as it relates to the Volksschule. Rein contains a good statement of questions at issue and a good bibliography of the discussion. Stötzer is a very meritorious

The general student, following a short course of lectures on the development of the system, and desiring only a general outline, will find that Donelson, Noble, and Russell contain useful short chapters on the historical development; that Dawson contains a good chapter on the present ideals and spirit of the schools; and that Prince, Seeley and Russell contain good short chapters which give the plan of organization and administration of the system.

Suggestions as to Reading.

This section of the Syllabus traces the final steps in the development of a centralized and efficient modern state school system. It is both a study in the history of educational development and a study of present conditions. Authorities have been cited for each important step in the process, and frequent references have been given to works where additional facts and statistics can be found by those who may need them. As a result, the section is a very condensed outline, the citations are abundant, and the list of references is large. This section of the Syllabus, with the three which follow it, offer plenty of material for a semester's study of comparative school systems. It naturally follows that in a general course on the history of education the instructor will desire to present only the main outline, leaving to the students either certain general reading or individual points to be looked up. For the first the student needs a few good references; for the second the abundant citations of the Syllabus offer sufficient guidance. Accordingly no attempt will be made to discuss the references in detail, the suggestions being confined to calling attention to the more important English references.

Of the Important Sources and Secondary Authorities of group 1, Barnard contains good historical sketches to about 1880; Donaldson contains an excellent chapter on the nineteenth century history of the German Volkschule; Nohle contains a very good short section on nineteenth century development; and Paulsen and Perry contain good short sketches of nineteenth century university development. Conrad is also good on recent university history. Bache, Cousin, and Stowe are classic reports. Of the German works, Clausnitzer, Fischer, and Paulsen are very able works. Schmid contains a very detailed history.

Most of the References under group 2 have been mentioned in connection with previous sections of the Syllabus, and do not need to be repeated here. Adamson is a good popular sketch of Fichte and his works, Cassell is a very good short article, and Smith contains a good biography and a translation of Fichte's more important works.

Of the Sources and Secondary Authorities in group 4, on the recent history or the present status of the German school system, the most important to the English student are Bolton, Dawson, Hart, Hughes, Klemm, Parsons, Paulsen, Perry, Prince, Russell, Ware, and Young. Hart, though old, is still probably our best description of German university life, and Paulsen is our best short work on the German universities. For the secondary schools of Germany, Russell is the standard work. Bolton is also a good work on the subject. Young gives many details as to the organization and administration of the higher schools. Klemm, Parsons, Perry, and Prince are the results of recent visits to German schools and describe conditions as the observers saw them. Hughes and Ware are books which make a comparative study of education in the principal European states and in America, and contain much of marked value. Hughes is the more important of the two. Ware deals chiefly with the educational basis of trade and industry, and points out the educational advantage of Germany in this connection. Perhaps the best single short article on the German school system as a whole, and on the spirit and ideals of the system rather than the details of its organization, is the chapter in Dawson. The various magazine articles cited relate to particular points and do not need individual mention. Any one of these articles is worth reading if information is wanted on the particular point to which it relates.

Besides the important books mentioned above, the many articles in the English Education Department Special Reports (Eng. Educ. Repts.) and in the Reports of the U. S. Commissioner of Education (Reps. U. S. Com. Educ.) are of the first importance, and the list should be consulted. The American reports are particularly valuable for current statistics and for articles on current educational questions. The articles in the English reports are usually much longer and very valuable. Frequent citations have been made to these two series of reports in the pages of the Syllabus.

Of the German works, Beier, Heinemann, Kaemmell, Pogge, Rein, and Stützner are worthy of particular mention. Beier contains many tables, is well arranged, and gives a good full presentation. Heinemann describes the details of the organization of the Volksschule. Kaemmell is a plain statement of the conditions and questions involved. Pogge contains the various decrees, and is in reality a copy of the school law as it relates to the Volksschule. Rein contains a good statement of questions at issue and a good bibliography of the discussion. Stützner is a very meritorious little work, and contains a statement of the present conditions in the various German states.

The general student, following a short course of lectures on the development of the system, and desiring only a general outline, will find that Donelson, Noble, and Russell contain useful short chapters on the historical development; that Dawson contains a good chapter on the present ideals and spirit of the schools; and that Prince, Seeley and Russell contain good short chapters which give the plan of organization and administration of the system.

1878 State aid granted to superior primary schools. These increased from forty in 1878 to two hundred twenty-six in 1887.

1878 The Government appropriated $24,000,000 to aid in building schoolhouses. Obligation laid on communes to own their own schoolhouses.

1878–1888 Advances to the Communes [$105,517,290], resulting in the erection or repair of more than twenty thousand schoolhouses. (Petit.)

1878–1897 $25,000,000 expended for sites and buildings for Normal Schools.

1879 Normal schools for women provided in every Department. [Law of Aug. 9.] (Beaussiere, 297–312; Jacoulet, 426–434; Martin.)

1880 Superior and academic councils reorganized, so as to preclude ecclesiastical control. [Law of Feb. 14.]

1881 Primary instruction made free. [Law of June 16.] Superior primary included as a part of the State's free system. Clerical letters of authorization abolished, and all teachers required to hold a State certificate. (Beaussiere, 312–325; Benoît-Lévy et Bocandé, 85–135; Compañy, pt. 2, ch. ii; Grimaud, 569–585.)

1882 Primary instruction made compulsory. [Law of Mch. 28.] (Beaussiere, 325–344; Benoît-Lévy et Bocandé, 11–84; Compañy, pt. 2, ch. i; Dreyfus-Brisac.)

1885 Proportions of State aid to communal schools fixed. [Law of June 20.] (Petit, 30–44.)

1886 After 1891 all primary teachers in boy's schools to be lay teachers. [Law of Oct. 30.] First complete State organization of higher primary schools and courses. This the organic law of the system. (Digest of law, Rep. U. S. Com. Educ., 1885–1886, p. 739–740.)

1892 Creation of écoles pratiques de commerce et d'industrie.

1893 Re-classification and new regulations for higher primary schools.

Great increase in practical and technical instruction.

Table showing the percentages contributed by the Communes, Departments, and the State toward the support of Primary Education. (Compiled from Parsons, pp. 16–17, and Rep. U. S. Com. Educ., 1890–1900, II, p. 1721.)

ELEMENTARY EDUCATION IN FRANCE.

(After charts No. 5 and 6, pp. cxxvi, of Vol. VI [1896–1897] Statistique de l'enseignement primaire. For exact figures from 1870–1897, see Min. Pub. Instr., 194–196.)

The Progress of Expenditure for Primary Public Education, the enrollment in Primary Schools, and the Total Population of France compared. The shaded area represents the total expenditure, though not including the cost of construction of buildings or of installing new schools. Previous to 1885 the figures are the nearest possible approximations, as the accounts were not kept accurately until that time. The extraordinary expenses of the communes are not included until 1885, but would add from two to four million francs to the total for the years from 1855 to 1868, and from eight to twelve million francs to the total for the years 1868 to 1878. In the table for pupils enrolled, children in the écoles maternelles are not included, but the primary school enrollment for Algiers is included from 1887–88 on.

6 Suggestions as to Reading.

This section of the Syllabus traces the various steps, following the pioneer work of the Revolution, in the development of a strongly centralized state school system. Like the section on Germany, it is both a history of educational development and a study of present conditions. Authorities have been cited for each important step in the process, and frequent references have been given to works where additional facts and statistics can be found by those who may need them. As a result the section is a very condensed outline, the citations are abundant, and the list of references is large. This section of the Syllabus, with the one which precedes and the one which follows it, offers plenty of material for a semester's study of comparative school systems. It naturally follows that in a general course on the history of education the instructor will desire to present only the main outline, leaving to the students either certain general reading or individual points to be looked up. For the first the student needs a few good references; for the second the abundant citations of the Syllabus offer sufficient guidance. Accordingly no attempt will be made to discuss the references in detail, the suggestions being confined to calling attention to the more important French and English references.

Of the Sources, Beuchamp, Buisson, Carrive, Constant, Gréard, and Pichard all contain reproductions of laws, decrees, ordinances, circulars, etc. Buisson contains lists of all Laws from 1789 to 1885, of all Ordinances from 1814 to 1847, of all Decrees from 1792 to 1880, and of all circulars from 1804 to 1878. Carrive, Constant, and Pichard are the best for primary instruction. Gobron is a treatise on the school law. Beaussire is excellent on the early discussion of the question of liberty of instruction, as it contains the sources and reports of the parliamentary discussions between 1873 and 1884. Benoit-Lévy contains a good résumé of the debates over the free law of 1881 and the compulsory law of 1892. D'Ollendron is a bibliography which the special student will find useful. *Martel is very good and full on primary instruction for the period from 1878 to 1888. The seven volumes on primary education in the Min. Publ. Instr. collection are of the first importance to the advanced or the special student. They contain elaborate maps and charts and numerous statistical tables of much value. The same applies to the volumes of the †† and the ‡‡ Min. Publ. Instr. collections.

Of the Secondary Authorities of group 2, *Arnold contains a good short history of education in France before 1855. The articles in Barnard's Journal also contain good short general articles on the history of education in France up to about 1850.
The two works by Compayré contain good general sketches of nineteenth century development. Schmid contains a detailed sketch of nineteenth century French educational history. Bache contains good observations of the condition of education in France about 1838. Aynard, Duruy, Grimaud, and Pécault relate to the great French question of the liberty of instruction. Aynard is particularly valuable, being a report, with documents, against liberty of instruction. Grimoud, a councillor of law writing from a Catholic point of view, traces the history of the question from 1789 to 1898. Collignon is a history of the first superior primary school of Paris. Fayet, mentioned previously under section XXXIV, is a valuable research. Liard is a standard work on the history of higher education in France. Matrat and Petit contain good resumés.

Of the works in group 3, having reference to the present organization of French education, Hughes and the two works by Teegan are particularly good and should be in all libraries. Parsons is an older popular work, presenting a somewhat different point of view from Hughes or Teegan, but not so well organized and probably less useful to the student. The articles in the English Education Department Reports (see list) and in the Reports of the U. S. Commissioner of Education (see list) are also of the first importance, and usually give abundant detail on single points. The three volumes by Min. Publ. Instruction, which were prepared for the Paris Exposition of 1900, are also very valuable, and ought to be translated into English. Delalain Frères, the two works by Nony et Cie, and Pape-Carpantier are manuals of instruction for use in the schools.

Of the short articles in group 4, the articles by Compayré on university and secondary education, Fitch on the French Leaving Certificate, the chapter in Lynch on secondary and religious education, and Ware on the present status of technical education in France are perhaps worthy of special mention, though all of the articles are good and worth reading by students looking for information on the points to which they refer.

The general student, following a short course of lectures on the development of the system, and desiring only a general outline, will find *Arnold, the articles in Barnard's Jr., *Compayré, the introductory chapter in *Teegan, and the Repts. U. S. Com. Educ. (see list) most useful for the historical development; and Hughes and the two small volumes by Teegan most useful for a view of the present organization of French education. These may be supplemented with advantage by selections from the Reports of the English and American Education Departments (see lists).

A LONDON DAME SCHOOL IN 1870.

(A drawing made on the spot, and printed in Bartley's The Schools for the People. [London, 1871.])

"The drawing was taken on the spot after some little diplomacy, and, although perhaps too picturesque, is a fair representation of one of the thousands of Dame Schools at the present moment at work in London. This individual one had been conducted by the same Dame, in the same cellar, almost in the heart of London, for thirty-six years. Twenty to thirty children have been constantly in attendance, paying 3d per week. * * * The Dame owned to the writer of these pages that she was not a scholar, as she was sixty-five years old, and had been brought up in the country, where schools were scarce in her time. She stated that she had 'prepared for advanced schools,' but limited her preparation to reading words and texts, though it was doubtful if any of her pupils ever got so far as this.

"The Dame, though of course completely unfit to teach, appeared to be a worthy old lady. She was very proud of stating that many of the parents of her present pupils had been brought up by her in the same premises. Her school is certainly not by any means the worst in London. In size it is about 70 superficial feet, and in height 6 feet 1 inch. It is somewhat above the average, as it will be remarked that the kitchen does not serve as a bedroom, but, besides acting for culinary purposes, is confined to the uses of parlour, school-room, and washhouse, the proprietor having a separate sleeping apartment upstairs. Within a hundred yards, in the same street, is another school of a like description, though rather larger, dirtier, and deeper underground."—Bartley, pp. 405-406.

Between 1833–1839 no Government regulation of grants. The above figures do not include administration expenses, or grants made to Scotland (about the same in amount as the Br. & F. S. Soc,) or to the Parochial Schools Union (very small). The drop in the curve between 1862 and 1867 was due to the introduction of the "payment by results" plan. (Prepared from a table in Eng. Educ. Dept. Sp. Rep., II, 530.)

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY IN ENGLAND.

WORK OF THE SCHOOL BOARDS IN PROVIDING SCHOOL ACCOMMODATIONS.

London taken as a type. (After a chart by Spaulding.)

In 1872, the first year in which the Board Schools made returns, the average attendance in Voluntary and Board Schools was 1,527,432 and 8,726 respectively; in 1898 the returns were 2,481,254 and 2,072,911 respectively. Note the deficiency in school accommodation in 1838, and that the Voluntary schools made no appreciable gain on this deficiency up to 1870.
INCOME AND EXPENDITURE FOR ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS.

Based on the returns made for Day Schools and Evening Continuation Schools inspected for Annual Grants. (Compiled from statistics given in the English Education Department Annual Reports.)
3 The progress of primary education in Great Britain, as shown by the reduction of the percentage of illiteracy.

A LONDON DAME SCHOOL IN 1870.

(A drawing made on the spot, and printed in Bartley’s The Schools for the People. [London, 1871.])

“The drawing was taken on the spot after some little diplomacy, and, although perhaps too picturesque, is a fair representation of one of the thousands of Dame Schools at the present moment at work in London. This individual one had been conducted by the same Dame, in the same cellar, almost in the heart of London, for thirty-six years. Twenty to thirty children have been constantly in attendance, paying 3d per week. * * * The Dame owned to the writer of these pages that she was not a scholar, as she was sixty-five years old, and had been brought up in the country, where schools were scarce in her time. She stated that she had ‘prepared for advanced schools,’ but limited her preparation to reading words and texts, though it was doubtful if any of her pupils ever got so far as this.

“The Dame, though of course completely unfit to teach, appeared to be a worthy old lady. She was very proud of stating that many of the parents of her present pupils had been brought up by her in the same premises. Her school is certainly not by any means the worst in London. In size it is about 70 superficial feet, and in height 6 feet 1 inch. It is somewhat above the average, as it will be remarked that the kitchen does not serve as a bedroom, but, besides acting for culinary purposes, is confined to the uses of parlour, school-room, and washhouse, the proprietor having a separate sleeping apartment upstairs. Within a hundred yards, in the same street, is another school of a like description, though rather larger, dirtier, and deeper underground.”—Bartley, pp. 405-406.

Between 1833–1839 no Government regulation of grants. The above figures do not include administration expenses, or grants made to Scotland (about the same in amount as the Br. & F. S. Soc.) or to the Parochial Schools Union (very small). The drop in the curve between 1862 and 1867 was due to the introduction of the "payment by results" plan. (Prepared from a table in Eng. Educ. Dept. Sp. Rep., II, 539.)

9 Suggestions as to Reading.

This section of the Syllabus traces the various steps which have led toward the organization of a national school system for England. Like the preceding sections on Germany and France, it is both a history of educational development and a study of present conditions. Authorities have been cited for each important step in the process, and frequent references have been given to works where additional facts and statistics can be found by those who may need them. As a result the section is a very condensed outline, the citations are abundant, and the list of references is large. This section of the Syllabus, with the two which precede it, offers plenty of material for a semester's study of comparative school systems. It naturally follows that in a general course on the history of education the instructor will desire to present only the main outline, leaving to the students either certain general reading or individual points to be looked up. For the first the student needs a few good references; for the second the abundant citations of the Syllabus offer sufficient guidance. Accordingly no attempt will be made to discuss the references in detail, the suggestions being confined to calling attention to the more important English references.

All of the Sources are valuable. The first by Barnard describes a school for the training of teachers for pauper schools. Bell's works contain many valuable documents. The Br. & F. Soc. Manual is a very interesting and valuable document, and well worth consulting.

In addition to the works containing reproductions of the laws relating to education, Greenough, cited under group 7, contains the 1902 act with a discussion of its purpose and probable results.

Of the Important Secondary Authorities of group 3, Adams is perhaps the most important. This is an excellent sketch of the history of the struggle for a national school system. Morley is also quite valuable for the period from 1869 to 1873. Montmorency is another valuable history, and covers the whole period of English aid to education. Spaulding contains a short introduction which is good. Gregory is a Churchman's history of the struggle for national education, being a history of the work of the Br. & F. School Society. The two articles by Sadler & Edwards are excellent, and contain statistical tables of much value. The articles in Barnard's Jr. contain a good short history. Craik is also good as a history of the movement, but ends with 1884.

Of the works in group 4, the Essays on Education of the Central Society (see list) are very important as sources. Fraser is an important document. The works by Hill, Kay, and Kay-Shuttleworth were very important at the time, and, while written with the purpose of influencing public opinion, may still be consulted with profit.

Of the Important Secondary Authorities of group 5, Allen & McClure is one of the most important. Harris' life of Raikes, and the two lives of Bell by Meiklejohn and Southey are of first importance. Bartley is an interesting and valuable book, which contains good descriptions of the various schools in existence in 1872. Cornwallis is a very interesting little book on Ragged Schools, describing their need and nature. Fitch, Gill, and Leitch contain short chapters on the work of the early reformers. Graham and Sydney contain good chapters on eighteenth century conditions, Sydney being particularly good.

Of the works in group 7, relating to the recent history and present condition of English education, Balfour, Holman, and Hughes are particularly valuable. Balfour is one of the best works on English Education which we have. The various articles in the Reports of the English Education Department and the U. S. Commissioner of Education (see lists) contain many articles of much value, and should be consulted for detailed information on special points. Hooper & Graham, Hulda, Lockyear, and Ware deal with England's lack of technical education. Spaulding is an excellent detailed account of the work of the London School Board, and gives much information as to the nature of the free State Schools of a large city. Hill's articles are good on current questions, as are the articles by Fitch in group 8. *Corbin is a very interesting description of Oxford and Oxford life.

Under group 6, Corbin is a good popular sketch of life in an English public school. Aronstein is a good short history of English secondary schools.

The general student, following a short course of lectures on the development of the system of English education, and desiring only a general outline, will find that Adams or Holman contain good short historical sketches; and that Balfour is very good on present-day education. The Reports of the U. S. Com. Educ. contain many good articles on current questions. The suggestions given above, with the citations of the Syllabus, give sufficient indication for more extensive reading.

XLII EUROPEAN INFLUENCES ACTING ON AMERICAN EDUCATION.

[Note—This section is not intended to be more than a brief outline of the principal foreign influences which have affected American education. It is in no sense intended as an outline of the history of education in America. The bibliography attached embraces but a few titles.]

A EARLY FOUNDATIONS.

I EARLY EDUCATIONAL FOUNDATIONS IN COLONIAL AMERICA.

1 New England and Virginia.

a State of education in England in 17th century. (†Brown, ch. ii; Syllabus, XXIX.)

b The Puritans of Massachusetts Bay. (Littlefield, 55-98; Martin, 1-89.)

1) English education transplanted. (†Brown, ch. iii; *Hinsdale, I, 592-594; *Martin, 1-12.)

a) Boston Latin School [1635].

b) Harvard College [1636].

c) Elementary education began as a function of the home, and in dame schools.

2) Transformation of English education.

a) Great influence of the Puritan religion. (Ford, 2-3.)

1) Need of an educated ministry and laity.

b) Elementary education became an important concern.

1) Ordinance of 1642. (†Hinsdale, 1231.)

2) Probable influence of Comenius. (†Hinsdale, 591.)

c) Organizations of school systems. (Clews, 58-69.)

1) Ordinance of 1642.

c) Spread of the movement to other New England colonies.

1) The Connecticut law of 1650. (†Hinsdale, 1240-1242.)

2) The New Haven law of 1655. (†Hinsdale, 1243-1245.)

3) The Plymouth laws of 1658 and 1672. (†Hinsdale, 1238-1239.)

4) The New Hampshire law of 1693. (Clews, 164-168.)

d) Causes of the educational leadership of New England. (†Martin, 404-405; Ford, 2-3; *Fiske, 140-144.)

e) The Virginians. (Eggleston, ch. v.)

1) Early educational projects. (Eggleston, 219-221.)

a) Henrico college. Influence of John Brinsley. (Syllabus, p. 201.)
2) The first Schools. (Eggleston, 221–223.)
   a) Secondary bequests and foundations.
   b) Private elementary schools.
   c) The College of William and Mary [1693].
3) Other methods of education.
   a) Tutorial system.
   b) Indentured servants.
   c) Education of children in European schools.
2 The Quakers of Pennsylvania. (Powell, 27–33; Wickersham, 19–50.)
   a) William Penn attempted to establish an educational system.
      1) The Great Law of 1682. (Wickersham, 32–36.)
      2) The Law of 1683. (Wickersham, 39–41.)
   b) Attitude of the Quakers toward higher education.
3 The educational contribution of the Dutch.
   a) State of education in Holland in the 17th century. (Campbell, I, 158–162; Fiske, I, 16–19.)
   b) Schools founded in New Amsterdam. (Boese, 11-14; Randall, 3–5.)
      1) The first elementary school in America.
         a) The school of Adam Roelandsen [1633].
      2) The earliest secondary school in New Amsterdam.
         a) The Dutch Latin School [1659].
   c) Possible influence of the Dutch on the English Puritans. (Campbell, I, 481–509, II, 405–467; Draper; Fiske, I, 30–35; Martin; Martin.)
      1) Of Holland on England.
      2) Of New Amsterdam on New England.
4 The educational influence of the Scotch-Irish. (Campbell, II, 479–480.)
   a) Their contribution to higher education in America. (Adams, 227, 230, 293–299.)
      1) Influence on Princeton College.
      2) Founded Washington and Lee University, Va., and Hampden-Sidney College.
   b) They fostered the movement for schools in the Southern colonies, —North Carolina, Virginia, Tennessee, and had an important influence on the spread of education in the South and West. (Adams, 292–294; Bush, 11; Campbell, II, 480–486; Meriwether, 18; Powell, 38–39.)
5 Schools founded by the Moravians and Swedes. (Powell, 11–21; Smith, 46–47.)
B LATER ENGLISH INFLUENCE.

I THE EARLY ENGLISH ACADEMY MOVEMENT.

1 The Non-Conformist Academies of England.
2 Probable English origin of the idea and name. (*Brown, VI, 225–232; †Brown, ch. viii; *Martin, 119–120; Steiner, 47–48.)
3 The work of Benjamin Franklin. (*Brown, VI, 225–232; Wickersham, 58–63.)
   a His Project for an Academy.
   b Founded the first Academy at Philadelphia [1751].
4 Influence of George Whitefield. (*Brown, VI, 228–230.)
   a His widespread influence in America.
   b His proposal to add an Academy to his Georgia Orphan House [1767].
5 Character of the English and American academies. (*Brown, VI, 226–232, 533–534; †Brown, chs. viii, ix.)
   a Course of study.
   b Theological bent. Philips Academy at Andover.
6 Academies founded in great numbers after the Revolution.
   a Centers of influence.
   b State systems of academies.
      1) The University of the State of New York.
7 Some lasting effects of the academies. (*Brown, VI, 533–536, VII, 112; †Brown, ch. xi; Martin, 127–134.)
   a Influence on the college curriculum.
   b Influence on the later normal schools.
      1) Forerunners of the normal schools.
      2) Hall's Seminary for teachers at Philips Andover Academy [1830].
   c Higher education of women.
      1) Coeducational nature of many academies.
      2) Founding of girls' seminaries.
         a) Work of Mary Lyon.
   d Private and public high schools a later development.

II THE SOCIETY FOR THE PROPAGATION OF THE GOSPEL.

1 Its origin and purpose. (Powell, 34–35.)
2 Its work.
   a In New York.
   b In Maryland. (Powell, 75.)
   c In South Carolina. (Meriwether, 13–14, 18, 109.)
3 Attempts to educate the lower races.
   a The Indians. (Clews, 15-16; Stockwell, 416-417.)
